

The Somerset Herald

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1879

The Senate Minority Committee, that makes provision for the United States army, is now controlled by three ex-rebel officers. What an exhilarating spectacle for the boys in blue!

The Pittsburgh Post talks of Gen. Coffuth as a candidate for Governor. If the General could get the Democratic caucus to saddle his name on to an appropriation bill, it might go through. Still there would be a right smart chance for a veto.

What a play it is the Bankrupt law is repealed, otherwise Speaker Russell might take advantage of it to "pilot out his political" promises to pay, made to procure his election, and the meeting of which at his mansion, is now giving him such mental agony.

The last act of the Democracy before it lost power was an attempt to dissolve the Union. Its first attempt on regulating power, is to overthrow the Constitution by forcibly depriving the President of the veto power. "Rule or ruin" is the one fixed policy of that party.

There are twenty-five committees in the Senate and the South has twenty of them, and yet it is a pleasant fact that a few simple minded Pennsylvania Democrats, that they are "somebody" in this government. Don't they hear the wailing of the old Southern lash?

The State of Missouri saw fit to enroll herself with the South, and therefore is held to be as liberal and unsafe for Northern labor as are all the Southern States. Consequently the present immense tide of immigration sweeps right through her rich lands, and settles in Kansas and Iowa.

It is the traitors who were pardoned by the government, and returned to the ballot, which have defiled that, which is now controlling the Democratic party and demanding the right to stuff ballot boxes, and thus perpetuate the power which they obtained by fraudulent ballots.

That spouse of the Greenbackers, Hendrick B. Wright, has gone back into the Democratic caucus. The old fraud only professed to join the Greenbackers during last campaign, for the purpose of cheating a few simpletons in this State into supporting that ticket, for the benefit of the Democracy.

The extra session has brought to the front a clear and well defined issue—Shall the South obtain by legislation what it failed to gain by arms?—Already the threat of legislation is made. Do this or we will stop the government, and the crack of the old whip again resounds throughout the Capital.

WHAT has become of all those patriots that, a short time since, had so much to say about conciliating the South? A little conciliation of the South is just now in order. There hasn't been so stalwart a Republican party as now exists in the North, since the days of Vicksburg, Gettysburg, and Appomattox. The hand will soon begin to play.

R. J. BRANT, the new Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, like Pelton, was a Democratic nephew. The uncle, Jesse D. Brant, was expelled from the Senate in 1862 for disloyalty, by a vote of 92 to 14. But disloyalty has again come to be honorable, and the nephew is to be fattened at the expense of patriotism and honor. Let the funeral proceed.

The Confederates have made a clean sweep of all the old officers in the U. S. Senate. Of course nothing else was to be expected, and, as a matter of course also, a Northern dough-face (Wallace, of Pennsylvania), was selected to do the dirty work of making the motions which the Southern Brigadiers had agreed upon in caucus.

The issue is distinctly made in Congress that this government shall stop, shall not proceed in the business for which it was organized, for want of the necessary money to carry it on, unless the President consent to, and approve such partisan legislation as is forced on the Democratic party by the rebel element now controlling it.

A new form of government has been introduced at Washington. Nothing is now attempted in either House, until a Democratic caucus first determines the question at issue. As the Confederate Brigadiers are a majority of the caucus, this is a safe and easy way of making and passing laws for the Nation, and there is no danger of a "slip up" on the South.

SENATOR WALLACE'S committee of Senators is sitting in Philadelphia hunting for frauds at the last elections. Why not put Wallace on the stand? What he doesn't know of frauds in this State, is not worth learning. When Teller was chairman of this Committee he procured as the inside history of the "tissue ballots." Now let Wallace tell us all about the "coffee colored naturalization papers."

We always thought one of the strong points in Gen. Coffuth's political character, was gratitude to friends for past favors. But if "our Alec" has become the "big Indian," which his admirers claim, he surely ought to have been able to secure a crumb or two for the soreheads and Greenbackers who elected him. Come, come, General! we will have to change our opinion if you permit the South to snatch dupes at away from their hungry dupes at away.

Coffuth has transferred his allegiance from Wallace to Randall, and the Pittsburgh Post is now loudly blowing his horn—all of which loudly flatters for President, and Dan O. Barr for State Treasurer, so far as the Somerset Democracy is concerned.

BIBBES, of Florida, appeared before Congress with the certificate of the Board of State examiners, and of the State Supreme Court in his favor, and copies of the returns, while Hill has only the certificate of the Governor alone. This Governor himself holds his seat as Governor, solely upon a record ordered by this same Supreme Court, whose authority he now defies. The Democrats have given Hill the seat, but the matter is not ended.

The Democrats want to strike out from the law that portion of it which permits the National government to use troops, if necessary, for the preservation of peace at the polls, and this under the pretext that the presence of armed men at the polls is an intimidation to the voter, and a restraint upon the freedom of the ballot. Did any one ever hear of a voter being deprived of his rights at the polls by a soldier of the United States? There is no provision in any of the States preventing State troops from suppressing riots, and preserving peace at the polls, and yet these Democratic law makers want to deprive the general government of a right and power exercised by the States. This is the merest pretext on the part of the Southern agitators, to give them the occasion to degrade the power of the United States, by setting up State rights as paramount to it. These fellows not only permit but call out their red shirted militia, to parade about the polls on election days, and intimidate and murder Republicans at their own sweet will, and yet, forsooth, the United States is to be prohibited by law from using its own troops to preserve order at National elections. The United States is required, with the Army, in time of peace, to preserve order when the civil authorities are unable to do so, at all times and in all places, and yet it is proposed to forbid it doing so, on one day of the year—the election day—the very time when violence is most to be apprehended, and should be most promptly suppressed. Now let us see how many Pennsylvania Representatives will get down on their bellies on this question, at the crack of the Southern lash.

SENATOR BEEK informed the Senate of the United States, a few days since, that proposed legislation could not be discussed in that body, until the Democratic caucus had first decided upon it. Well, this new coordinate branch of the government, instituted to give the Southern Brigadiers entire control of the legislation of Congress—has at last issued its mandate for the future regulation of elections, and it is ordered that all the vital portion of the election laws, intended to prevent and punish frauds at the ballot box, shall be repealed, and repealed to be repealed as riders on the appropriation bills, so that if the President vetoes the bills, the government will be left without any money being appropriated therewith to defray expenses.

The proposition to present the repealing bills as parasite measures was quickly voted down in the caucus. Now this deliberately matured plan of action, decided upon by the Democratic party in Congress, means what? That there shall be free scope for fraud at the polls, or the government shall stop. This is a revolution, pure and simple. It is a determined, deliberately devised, and coolly concocted scheme to set aside the Constitution. That instrument provides that the President shall have power to veto any bill that does not meet his approbation, and this revolutionary faction has decided that if he exercises this constitutional right and duty, they will stop the entire government by refusing to appropriate money to carry it on. A refusal to vote the necessary appropriations means what? To disband the Courts, and the different departments for the transaction of public business, and to leave the army without pay or provisions of war, and consequently the frontier States and Territories unprotected, and their citizens a prey to the Indians. This is the scheme determined upon by this Democratic Congress, and the people may as well prepare themselves for the struggle and its results. The Republican party of the North would be craven and recreant to every sense of duty, if it did not resist to the uttermost this new rebellion. It means—or we are utterly mistaken—that the people shall have a fair vote, and when that vote is fairly polled, it shall be fairly counted, fairly returned, and have its due weight and influence. It means that this Democratic Congress, in which one-half of the members from the South hold their seats by reason of fraudulent votes, fraudulent returns, and intimidation and murder, shall not perpetuate its power, by sweeping away all protection to the ballot box. It means that the Presidency in 1880 shall not be stolen through fraud in New York and other Democratic cities, as Buss Tweed and Tilden stole the State of New York from Grant in 1868, and the Baltimore Democratic ringleader stole the State of Maryland at the late gubernatorial election. The Republicans of the North are a unit on this question; we believe the President is with us, and in this great struggle for the preservation of the Constitution, and for a pure and honest ballot, we have faith, and the great ruler of Nations will give us a safe deliverance.

The first act of the Democracy party on obtaining control of both branches of Congress, is to demand the unfettered right to cheat at the ballot box, by repealing the election laws.

SENATOR WALLACE got in a good lick at Randall, when Marshall Keates testified that Randall's district comprised the slums of Philadelphia, and was the only place in demand it necessary to appoint special Marshals to make arrests, and preserve order at the polls. You see, the Senator called Alderman "Bill McMullen" and he got at the true inwards of all the Democratic scandalous in the Quaker City, also, provided, that the witness is not dressed within a short memory as Napier Pelton owns.

NO COMPROMISE. The Republican members of Congress have decided upon a line of action in defence of the election laws, in which they will be supported by the best opinion of the country. They will break every Democratic attempt to repeal the barriers to fraud in elections, earnestly and in solid phalanx; they will make no compromise with Democrats, and will demand ample time for debate. On the other hand, they will not waste the money of the country in a vain search for a weak Senator, who will stand a weak opposition, who will oppose in token to a useless. There will be no filibustering, but when the case of honest voting was fraudulent voting has been argued, the majority will lie in to the President and to the country.

The Republican party has thus taken a brave stand on this question. The decision of its representatives in Congress will be approved by honest sentiment, and the result of their action is inflexibly opposed to breaking down the safeguards of elections. They believe absolutely in the wisdom of the Republicans in the last Congress who prevented the passage of a proposition which carried with them this obnoxious legislation. They recognize this as the ground on which the battle of this session must be fought, the ground on which there can be no compromise, from which they will not flinch for an instant, and they will not permit any measure to return her to her family. The latter have to do with information up to tonight of the whereabouts of the couple. They are reported to be in New Haven or New York, and it is believed that the latter report is true, as the young lady is so well known as the former city her appearance on the street would lead to immediate detection.

Gov. Hubbard is pestered with grief, and has not let the house since his daughter's act was discovered. His friends assert that he will positively refuse all advances toward a reconciliation. Such advances he has every reason to participate with her father. He has not yet met his daughter and young Sheppard, naturally based his hopes on the fact that his father-in-law would go further and make some provision for the support of himself and his wife. It is stated that a letter from Nellie to her mother has been sent, but that the contents have been kept in a family secret. For years an affair has been a great scandal, and this, late last night, when it was first reported, it was regarded as a mere story, and not very likely to be true, but it has been gradually coming to light to-day and to-night. It is the subject of conversation everywhere, and such at the earnest request of Gov. Hubbard's friends, and some of the leading members of the press, to publish even the slightest allusion to it. There is much difference of opinion as to the possible finale of the affair, but some of the friends of the family assert that there are possibilities of reconciliation, but the increasing of the ladies of the family, and in view of the facts that the parties not only attempted to palliate their act by lawful wedlock, but the young man, although occupying a social position, and very respectable, bears a fair reputation in the town, and may make even a better husband than anticipated.

WISBKA, KAN., March 25—A runaway has been current here for many days—the 11th animal disappeared about 90 miles south of here. A little attention was paid to it on account of so many schemes in this country, but a correspondent had an interview to-day with a party from the fields, who has no interest in the case, and who is fully convinced that there is no deception being practiced. The dog was first discovered about January 15 by two farmers named Kimball and McDougal who were digging a well. They were led to a man named Chickering who went to New York and formed a company, and then sent an agent to Reno, Nevada, and had the animal assayed. The correspondent has examined the assay report, it reads: "Gold $2 per ton, silver $2 per ton. A. B. Williams, Assayer. The New York company then tried to get the land, but the farmers would not sell, so they pronounced it a fraud and returned to New York, and as soon as the excitement died down, an agent and bought a mile square, except 40 acres of Government land they could not buy. It was their intention to keep this secret, but one man became so excited he could not keep his tongue in, and he went and threw the ore to the surface by blasting. Great excitement now prevails. Thousands are trying to secure claims on the Government land under the mining act.

Four companies are organized. One of them claims to be worth $6,000,000. The farmers are trying hard to hold the lot, but are being overrun by capitalists. To-day is the first time that these capitalists would give any information. They wanted the 40 acre tract also, but the fever is high, and they had offered a former $30,000 for his farm adjoining, and were refused, they saw it was no use to try to blind the people any longer, and showed their assay report as above.

Negro Hanged. NARRVILLE, March 28—Knox Martin, the colored murderer of J. Whittemeyer and wife, was hanged here to-day in the presence of 12,000 people. Before leaving the jail he made a full confession of the crime. He had a statement on the scaffold that the body was given over to the physicians, who attempted to resuscitate him.

PERDRAK Katchigkooa Hanged. LONDON, March 25—The Times reports that there were shocks of earthquake in Northern Persia during Saturday and Sunday. Minneh was much damaged, and the adjacent villages of Turk and Manawa were completely destroyed. A great number of inhabitants only escaped death.

Frankfurt, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating manners. Few had suspected any relations, toward young Sheppard, other than might be proper in a young man of his position and fortune. He was a very handsome man, and his appearance was very impressive. He was the son of a wealthy family, and his education was of a high order. He was known to many of the leading men of the State, and his name was mentioned in connection with the prospect of a cabinet minister in the late administration.

FRANKFORT, Ky., March 26—Judge J. M. Elliot, of the Court of Appeals, was assassinated, and instantly killed, on the street, about the population of the Nile valley. The scene depicted resembles those in some of the villages where the people are poor, stunted, and suffering with the hardships of despair. The madman, who died, was a young man of 19, highly educated and of fascinating