Ayer's Sarsaparilla

For Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Eruptions and Eruptive diseases of the skin, Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Blotches, Tumors, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa, arising from internal ulceration, and Uterine disease, Syphilitic and Mercurial diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, General Debility, and for Purifying the Blood.

This Sarsaparilla is a combination of vegetable alteratives — Stillingia, Mandrake, Yellow Dock — with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and is the most efficacious medicine yet known for the diseases it is intended to cure.

Its ingredients are so skilfully combined, that the full alterative effect of each is assured, and while it is so mild as to be harmless even to children, it is still so effectual as to purge out from the system those impurities and corruptions which develop into loathsome disease.

The reputation it enjoys is derived from its cures, and the confidence which prominent physicians all over the country repose in it, prove their experience of its usefulness.

Certificates attesting its virtues have accumulated, and are constantly being received, and as many of these cases are publicly known, they furnish convincing evidence of the superiority of this Sarsaparilla over every other alterative medicine. So generally is its superiority to any other medicine known, that we need do no more than to assure the public that the best qualities it has ever possessed are strictly maintained.

TIME TURNS THE TABLES.

Ten years ago, when she was ten,
I used to tease and scold her;
I liked her, and she loved me then,
A boy some five years elder.

I liked her, she would fetch my book,
Bring lunch to stream or thicket;
Would oil my gun or bait my hook,
And field for hours at cricket.

She'd mend my cap and find my whip,
Ah! boy's hearts are stony!
I liked her rather less than "Gyp,"
And far less than my pony.

She loved me then, though heaven knows why,
Small wonder had she hated,
For scores of dolls she'd had to cry,
Which I decapitated.

I tore her frocks, I pulled her hair,
Called "wet" the sneen upon it;
Our fishing I would even snare
Catch tadpoles in her bonnet.

Well, now I expiate my crime;
The Nemesis of fables
Came after years—To-day Old Time
On me has turned the tables.

I'm twenty-five, she's twenty now,
Dark-eyed, pink-cheeked and bonny,
The curls are golden round her brow;
She smiles and calls me "Johnny."

Of yore I used her Christian name,
But now through force of malice,
When she is by my lips can't frame
Five letters to make "Alice."

I, who would joke with her and tease,
Stand silent now before her;
Dumb, through the very wish to please,
A speechless, coy adorer.

Or, if she turns to me to speak,
I'm dazzled by her graces;
The hot blood rushes to my cheek,
I babble commonplaces.

She's kind and cool—ah! Heavens knows how
I wish she mocked and faltered;
She likes me, and I love her now
Dear, dear! how things have altered!

THE MIDNIGHT CRY.

BY T. C. HARBAUGH.

In the early days of a certain Western State a crime was committed, which has gained a place among the annals of dark deeds. It was murder; but the circumstances surrounding it are so noteworthy that we shall here transcribe them. They present the most remarkable instance of a young man selling his life when his own life was in jeopardy, in order to conceal a petty vice—the most remarkable instance of the kind on record.

One night in March, 1831, a farmer named Buskirk left a tarrying town, where, during the day, he had disposed of a lot of hogs. He rode a sorrel horse, and carried the proceeds of his sales in heavy leathern saddle bags. The money was mostly in silver coin of the dollar denomination, and the amount, therefore, was quite weighty. Buskirk, a fearless man, did not go armed, but rode unconcernedly from town a little under the influence of liquor, but not drunk enough to call attention to the fact.

As he lived only twenty miles from the market, he expected to reach home about midnight. But when the morning dawned Zimri Buskirk was still absent from his farm. His horse stood at the stable door neighing for admittance. The well known saddle bags were missing, which fact immediately gave rise to suspicion of foul play, and search for the farmer was at once instituted.

At a distance of five miles from home the body of Buskirk was found lying by the roadside, and not far away lay the saddle bags, rifled of their contents. The villain in his haste to get at the money had cut his way to it, instead of unbuckling the heavy straps. The farmer was found to be quite dead; one side of his skull had been crushed as if by a blow from a bludgeon, or some murderous weapon of that sort, and his pockets, like the saddle bags, had been clearly despoiled of their contents.

The excitement from the moment of the discovery became intense. Zimri Buskirk was one of the most influential farmers of the neighborhood, and a man universally liked. He was not known to possess one enemy, and no one ever dreamed that the murder had been committed for the sake of anything but that of subsequent murder.

Though the country was scoured for the perpetrator of the deed, no traces were discovered; but a clew was suddenly furnished in a startling robbery.

The body of the farmer had been discovered not far from a farm house occupied by a family named Milligen, which consisted of the parents and two children, son and daughter, who had passed their minority. While the excitement still raged, Ellen Milligen came forward and desired to make a statement which she said had tortured her ever since the night of the murder. She said she was the possessor of a guilty secret which she could no longer keep; she could not sleep for it, and it was the spectre of her waking hours.

The girl then proceeded to state that she was up at the hour of half past eleven or thereabouts, on the night of the—th, and that she heard a horse coming down the frosty road from the direction of B——. Not regarding the sound of any moment, she was about to re-enter the house, when she heard an oath, followed by a dull thud and a groan. Then she heard a name uttered twice in a tone of mingled agony and supplication.

A moment later the sound of hoofs came again to her ears, and the horse seemed to be galloping toward the Buskirk farm.

The excitement that followed Miss Milligen's narration may be imagined, for a pen cannot describe it.

It was believed that the name which she had heard was that of the murderer, which had fallen from the lips of the victim before insensibility or death followed the blow. The young girl visibly hesitated when asked by the magistrate to pronounce the name. She covered her face with her hands, and in all probability would have fallen if she had not been supported by her brother Hiram. She did not like to utter the name that might doom one of the young men of her acquaintance to the gallows, for she could not believe him guilty, yet she had heard Zimri Buskirk call on him to spare his life on that awful night.

Ellen Milligen was pressed to mention the name, and further the ends of justice, in which the whole country was interested, and at last her lips parted.

'God help him and pity me!' she said. 'The name I heard was Abner Tenney's.'

If a thunderbolt had fallen into the crowd, astonishment would not have been more complete. Men started at the name, and the women uttered cries that added greatly to the confusion.

Standing near the witness was a young man of five and twenty, the only son of a minister who watched over the little flock of believers that worshipped in the church hard by, and a youth of exemplary habits to the outer world. His face was as pale as death, and at the mention of his name he started back with a cry and found the eyes of all fixed upon him.

His name was Abner Tenney.

He made no effort to fly, and when strong hands were laid upon him, he smiled and told the people he would face the accusation.

The young man was formally arrested on Ellen Milligen's statement, and brought to the bar of justice. He denied the crime, but astonished everybody with his answer to the inquiry concerning his whereabouts on the night of the crime.

'I admit that I was not at home, but where I was that night I will not tell!'

This answer was twisted, as it could easily be by the excited community, into broad strands of guilt, and the young man was remanded by the magistrate for a regular trial at the next term of court.

There were a few who believed that he might be innocent. When it became generally known that he had been a suitor for Eva Buskirk's hand without the sanction of her father, revenge was added to the motive of the murder. Ellen Milligen's word was believed; she was a girl of violent passions, but her veracity in this case was not dragged into question. She acknowledged that she loved Abner Tenney—hence her reluctance to testify; and after the preliminary examination, she said that she regretted having told the secret.

But it was out now, and the young man lying in the county jail reiterated his innocence, but still he refused to make known his whereabouts and occupation on the night of the murder.

It was strange that Ellen Milligen's testimony should remain uncorroborated in its essential particulars; but there were several parties who had seen the accused near the scene of the crime at that late hour of the night.

He did not deny this, but persistently refused to explain his presence there.

His father visited him and begged him to unburden himself; but to him he invariably returned the same reply:

'Were I to tell you, you would feel as badly as though I had committed the murder.'

The young man was visited by many acquaintances, to whom he would not reveal his secret, and it at last became more than half suspected that he had accomplices who had concealed the money, not one dollar of which had, as yet, been recovered.

Ellen Milligen continued to reaffirm her statement. She was confident that she had heard Buskirk call on Abner Tenney in tones that left no doubt in her mind that he addressed his murderer. As the time for the trial approached, she lost her reluctance, and openly declared that she knew that the accused had committed the crime.

Her brother not having been at home on the night of the murder was not summoned as a witness. It was known that he, too, had visited the Buskirk homestead as a suiter for Eva's hand, but that of late he had turned his attention to another lady, to whom he was paying his devoirs.

The excitement consequent upon the farmer's violent death and Abner Tenney's arrest did not for one moment abate during his sojourn in jail. To a young man who visited him, he said:

'Spare me, John. You know where I was that night; you know what I was doing. If I escape this time I will be a better man. The murder of my honor would send my father to the grave as quickly as the shedding of my blood by the law. Do not come forward and try to save me by sacrificing my honor.'

'They will hang you if you do not tell all,' was the reply. 'Let us swear to the truth. Do not let Eva believe that you are the murderer of her father.'

The last sentence drove Abner Tenney to the wall in his cell with a groan. It seemed to unnerve him.

'She will never believe it!' he cried, a moment afterward. 'In her eyes I will ever remain guiltless of her father's murder, even though they hang me for the crime.'

'The young man's visitor left, and joined two other men of his age in the corridor of the jail.

'What does he say now?' was asked with eagerness.

'He is still obdurate, and declares we must not expose him.'

'Can we save him without the exposure?'

'We must! We shall!'

The trio were youths of respectable parents, but considered fast young men—. They had of late been Abner Tenney's companions, much to the regret of the few pious people who had noticed the familiarity.

'Look here,' said one, addressing his companions, 'I hold myself in part responsible for Abner's present situation. We led him into the habits that have fastened themselves upon us. We must save him!'

The spokesman of the dissolute party was a young student of medicine, and it was not long afterward that a learned medical gentlemen of Cincinnati came to the country. The body of Zimri Buskirk was exhumed and examined.

John French stood by and watched the professor.

'Well!' he said at last.

'You say she swears to hearing Buskirk cry out after the thud of two blows?'

'So she swore.'

'The first blow must have produced instant death. It drove pieces of skull into the brain. A stab in the heart could not prove more instantly fatal than the initial blow.'

'That is your opinion?'

'I will swear to it.'

The young man was satisfied and the body, minus the head, was returned to the grave.

'If he will not sacrifice his honor to save his neck, I will not save it for him, and his father need not know the truth.'

These words passed from John French's lips as he passed from the house with the professor.

From that day the young student and his friends were not idle. They made many trips from the county, and compared notes on their return.

The trial came at last and the accused plead 'not guilty,' in a firm voice.

Ellen Milligen repeated her testimony, so damaging to the defence, and adhered to it through a rigorous cross questioning to which she was subjected. She had heard the cries after the blows; she was positive of this.

The other evidence offered by the State was merely circumstantial. The defence introduced the professor, who explained the nature of the wounds, and swore that the first blow had produced instant death. This produced a sensation in court. It staggered Ellen Milligen's testimony, until that hour believed invulnerable. The blows that now followed from the defence were hard and telling ones.

No alibi was attempted. The accused had forbidden such a plan, on the ground that it would reveal the secret he was guarding so closely; but the defence became aggressive. It proved that Hiram Milligen, Ellen's brother, was not where he said he was on the night of the murder. As the young man was not under arrest, the court forbade the introduction of such testimony, when John French then arose and exclaimed:

'I do not accuse him of the murder of Zimri Buskirk; my affidavit is in the court room; the sheriff holds it at this moment. Look at the man! Guilt is written on his face. He is trying to leave the house. Catch him!'

The confusion that now ensued was intense. Ellen Milligen, with a loud shriek, fell forward on the floor where she was permitted to lie, for all eyes were turned upon her brother

Pistol in hand, the young man was clearing a path to the door. No one dared to lay hands on him, for he threatened to shoot the first one who touched him, and thus he reached the door leading to the street.

On the threshold he paused and faced the excited occupants of the court room.

'You will never put me in Abner Tenney's place!' he cried. 'If I did kill Zimri Buskirk, you shall not prove it and hang me!'

'The next moment there was a loud report, and a human body, after swaying for an instant, fell heavily upon the floor.

'Hiram Milligen had taken his own life.

This tragic occurrence, as might be supposed, put an end to Abner Tenney's trial. It established his innocence in the eyes of all, and the guilty was beyond punishment of an earthly tribunal.

Upon her recovery, Ellen Milligen unfolded one of the darkest plots on record. She confessed that her testimony was but a tissue of falsehoods; that she knew that her brother had killed the farmer for the purpose of getting his money, and accused young Tenney, in order to prevent him from winning Eva Buskirk. Ellen piqued at Tenney's refusal to court her, had entered into the plot with a revengeful spirit. But the game had failed.

Of course the minister's son was released, and Ellen Milligen left the country between two days. She died several years later in a den of infamy in the South.

Abner Tenney led Eva Buskirk to the altar several months after his release, and became one the solid men of the South. I believe he is still living, but his father, the minister, is dead; and the secret which he guarded so zealously at one time is no longer one.

It was simply this: Despite the holy influences under which he had been raised, he had departed from the path of recitude and become a gambler, along with John French and his companions. On the night of the murber of Mr. Buskirk, the quartette were in the midst of a carouse which the youth refused to confess for the sake of his father, who never dreamed of his wild life.

But John French had saved the man whom he had led into vice, and kept him from the gallows. Tenney's secret was told by him after he had made a man of himself; but it puzzles many people who know it not this day.
