WASHINGTON LETTER

By Our Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 5, 1879. Not in the memory of the oldest inhabitant has Congress made such a mild beginning as it has made this session. Correspondents and report-ers are at their wit's end for a sensation, but as yet nothing has been found that will make hair-lifting head-lines. At first it was thought there would be internal division on the financial question, but even the most sanguine lover of discord has ceased to hope for excitement from this source. The first day was unusnally quiet and common place, notwithstanding the perfection of the weather, (for a week Washington has beea like summer, even to the extent

Written for the HERALD. THE FORLORN CHARGE. ORIGINAL.

It was at the battle of Chancellorsville, at the hour of sunset, the hour that Stonewall Jackson fell, that Major Keenan, a brave and daring cav-alry officer, led the foriorn charge consisting of three hundred man to "glory and the grave." When the sun was low descending Charged the corps of Jackson rending All our lines.

Death a bounteous harvest reaping. Where they charged like billows leaping, Or a flood of fire, sweeping Through the pines.

Man and beast before that fire. Fled, to escape the fearful ire Of the storm Freedom saw her banner trailing, Saw the forman's florce assailing-

Knew that blood might prove availing, Young and warm Then she speaks, first child of heaven, "Sacrifice must now be given, Now align Who will pour out the libation ?

Keenan answered, "an oblation Of three hundred for the nation. I assign." Then there followed hasty mounting. A to-morrow no one counting-
