VOL. XXIX. NO. 34.

A FREE SEAT.

He was old and poor, and a stranger

Ah! just the place Fm looking for,

He passed through the spacious columned

As he wended slowly thitherward

In the great metropolis,

I trust he is here to day."

And up the carpeted aisle,

He saw supprise and smile.

To listen to gospel truth:

To the aged one by youth.

Not a heart to him relented.

Then passed into the street, Up to his shoulders he lifted a stone

The lay in the dust at his feet,

In from of the rank of pews;

He made a cost for his use.

A great confusion he sees. Many a chock in crimsoned shares Some whisper together sore, hoosing a place to see and hear.

Calmly sitting upon the hage stone.

Folding his hands on his knees;

lowing reviewing the worshipers,

To the stranger, old and poor,

As if by magic so me fifty doors,

lianging his stone for a crimsoned pew.

He thinks it was a mistake after all,

The preacher's discourse was elegannt,

Was preached by a humble stone.

Twas a lesson of lowliness and worth

A CHURCH MOUSE,

That lodged in many a heart.

That the truth may not depart.

And Christ came late that day,

Open instantaneously,

Are proffered hastily ;

And wiping a tear away,

The organ in finest tone,

And hore it up the grand broad side

And as he passed, on many a face

From pew to pow, up one whole side,

Then across the broad front space;

of a friendly voice had bid him sit

Not a sign of deference had been paid

No door was opened by generous hand, The pews were paid for-rented,

As he paused a mement outside to think,

And he was a stranger, old and poor,

rum pew to pew, down the other side He walked with the same slow pace.

To a stately edifice.
