A Street Horror in Paris.

All Paris says a correspondent, has been deeply stirred by the shocking fate of a little girl of nine, Georgette Babin, the only child of a prosperous green grocer of Rue Belzunce. She attended a day school, to which her father every morning took her and fetched her back at noon. A few days ago they were walking home, hand in hand, rejoicing in the bright sunshine that had come out after the snowfall. The streets they passed were busy with traffic and .squadrons of sweepers who were pushing heaps of snow towards sewer traps purposely open-ed to receive them. At the corner of the Rue Hautvilce the child let go her father's hand to tighten her muffler. Just then a wagon drawn
