MY DREAM. ELLA D. CRAPMAN.

As I slept, I dreamed a dream ; I was floating down a stream

Glistoning in the sunset's gleam. Flowers bloomed along the side,

And an angel was my guide, As I drifted down the tide. And my heart was free from juin,

For I was a child again In the sanshine's golden rain.

Soft and low, soft and low Come the rippling water's flow ;

And the salls were white as snow. And I saw full many a best On the widening waves afloat-

Heard full many a tuneful note. But I saw, as on they sped, Some, no more the angels led. Unly hovering overhead.

Some were bright with inugiting gles As they waved their lands to me, Others weeping mourufally.

And I asked the augel white: Will my beat, so froil and light, Anchor me in regions bright?

"Whither does this river flow ? For I know not where I go -Will It wide and wider grow?"

Sweetly spake my angel puide : "Thou art drifting with the tide O'er an occon de p and wide, Full of weary care and strife And they call this opean-Life.
