SOMERSET, PA., WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1, 1881.

GRANDMOTHER

Coundbrother's face is wrinkled. And her eyes are getting dlim, So she cannot read her Bible, Nor tollow through the lynna.

Her step is growing slow r. Her voice is sometimes faint, But it never will get weak enough: To make a sad complaint.

Her hands are sometimes idle, For knitting tires her so. But her brain is always busy With thoughts of Heaven, I know.

She is thinking of her dear ones. A little way ahead; Just at the end of the pathway Her fired foot must treat.

I think, sometimes, as I watch her, Breaks over her face, and she whispers, "Yes dear in a little while!"

Her face will lose its wrinkles, And the dimness leave her eyes, And standingther will be young again, In the land beyond the skies.

To think of her, standing there, At the gates of Heaven, knocking, When her feet have climbed the stair And the key is turned in the portals,

She passes into Heaven, And the peace on the otherside, To meet her husband's kisses, And bear him softly say,

For this happy, happy day!" Yes, grandmother will be young again, Though her heart was never old, When she enters into Heaven, And trends the streets of gold.
