Months on a Desert Island.

At one of the most isolated posts in Oregon, situated several hundred miles distant from the settlements, but in point of accessibility farther than China, the commanding officer was wrecked in the South Atlantic Ocean, 280 miles from the African coast, on the 17th of October, 1880. The island on which the bark stranded in a heavy storm is thirty miles long and is from three to ten miles wide, with a volcanic group of mountains in the centre about 6,000 feet high. It is covered with snow and ice, the glaciers reaching quite down to the coast's edge.
