A WOMAN'S ARGUMENT.
Outside it was dreary and cold and wet, and Larry lounged happily in its glow. And talked of his farm and the men to whom he sold his produce.

LOLA, OR THE SONG-BIRD OF GLEN ELDER.
Perched high upon a hillside stood a brown school house overlooking Glen Elder, a deep, dark gorge, where a sun sparkling and singing brook, away to the right were hills that rose up by night and day a busy whir, and clustered about were the humble homes of the village of Tuscarora, and looking as though they had straggled away from its school house, or that building which had played truant and gone up the hill for the purpose of sliding down, to gather water from berries, or catch a view of the unequal panorama. What it really did accomplish was the appropriating of the sweet summer breezes, as well as the forest of the snow-laden blasts during the long winter months.

city. Suddenly a song, clear and soft, came out to them; then it sank as the dying breath of the zephyr, gently mingled with the musical chirp of some waking bird, and flew away thick; then all of the woodland warblers gathered to take up the song and pour it out in a wonderful melody, and with it came the cry of the whippoorwill Leslie had heard years before in Glen Elder. With a rapidly beating heart and misty eyes he forced his way in with the crowd, to see standing before the footlights a tall, sylph-like form clad in shimmering white, while upon the throat sparkled and about the lovely throat sparkled diamonds. The beautiful, dark, half-Spanish face, the olive cheeks with tint of the pomegranate he could not be mistaken in, and Leslie knew that bird of his old home, the song bird of Glen Elder.

METHODS OF INSTRUCTION.
BY A. C. HOLBERT.
CHAPTER XI.
I have chosen as the subject of this chapter the Teachers' Library. At first sight it may seem as though this was foreign to the main subject of these articles, but I think a very cursory examination will satisfy you that it is not. I have not gone out of my way to drag this subject into them; if it do not I hope that a perusal of the chapter will do so.

not be an atheist to believe in Darwin; neither is there anything derogatory to man's dignity in believing that he has a monkey for his very remote ancestor, away back along the track of the planet, and the eyes of the past dimly, and sooner acknowledge such an ancestry than the convicts stare of some of the first families of Virginia. Darwin's great work is "Origin of Species," a "Descent of Man," and "Expression of the Emotions in Man and Animals." If you have never read them, they will make the image of the monkey too apparent, don't read them.

If you desire a little more philosophy than you find in the school books, you will find "Heat as a mode of motion," "Lectures on Sound," "Light and Electricity," "Forms of Water," and do not fail to read "Faraday as a Discoverer." Tyndall's works, as I have elsewhere stated, will render you better acquainted with your duties; you will get ideas from the plain practical ideas, which you can use in the school room. No matter if Tyndall is the man who proposed the "prayer test" in New York several years ago. His works are all right, and you want of the Emotions in Man and Animals." If you have never read them, they will make the image of the monkey too apparent, don't read them.
