"THE HEART OF A MAN."

John B. Hay

In the grim bush of midnight When your house has grown so still, I rise from my sleep in the churchyard To wander about at my will. pass your unopened door softly

And stand once more by your side, Till you dream that in heaven I love you As well as the day I died.

But my hour on earth is shortened; The light of the moon grows dim-As my feet go down your stairway. Out into the darkness grim.

And back to the yawning churchyard I go with the rising wind-But a sudden whisper holds me Though I dare not look behind.

Think, you, poor ghost, he loved you, That you hasten to watch his rest, When his heart was young he loved me I was his first and best, In the land of death he will claim me-Ere she finished a living voice spoke
