to make all the cloth you please in Europe and send it to America free to compete with American goods. But what will become of our mills? Ah, but they say you run your mills? There is only one way in which the mills could be run. Professors in college may theorize until they are insane but there is only one way to do it and that is to cut down the wages of your men, the masons and the brick layers and the carders, spinners and others employed in running a mill. Of course it can be done. [Laughter.] But say our friends, the workmen, "if you do that, Mr. Frye, I can have no beef." No, but you can have soup, four times as weak and black bread. The Democratic doctrine is that soup and black bread is good enough for working-men. They say, "But I couldn't send my children to school." But you could put them to work in the factories as they do in England. It would be possible to go to church. No, sir; she could not dress as other people dress, but that makes no difference. How do you like that? The Republicans say: "We are going to run the mills. We are going to keep the smoke over Pittsburgh. I can't let you lay down wages." It holds the doctrine that the man who works with his hands is entitled to live as well as the rich loafers who stand around and do nothing. It believes that the better a man is paid for his work the better citizen he is. It believes in the right of every man to the comforts and luxuries of life and enough to lay up something for a rainy day, or put in a piece of land and build a house and then he has a stronger interest in good government. It holds that every man should have an opportunity to give his children a good education. The Republican party wants your wife to go to church. Why? To make a better man of you. The Republican party says to the European manufacturer: Make all the cloth you please and bring all over you. But it costs us $200,000,000 a year to run our Government, every year heavy sum. Every time you send us a piece of cloth worth $50 you can step up to the Treasurer and pay him $25 to help him out of it. Now, don't you see that it is not possible to get cloth costs just as much as our cloth and we have got them just where we want them. [Applause.] That is a protective tariff and that is all a protective tariff is.

There is one nation on earth that wants free trade in every article. That is England, and yet England was the most pronounced protectionist in the world for years. When Ireland began to build ships she declared that they should sell to none but English shippers and the ship owners of England and Ireland went to raising cable. England said you shall ship nowhere but to us. She did precisely the same with us. Our hills were full of iron and coal, but she said we should not develop it. We should ship nothing except that which we could not use. England lost the brightest diamond in her crown. [Applause.] England pursued the policy of protection until she had mills enough to supply the world with iron, and then suddenly she turned around and became the greatest advocate of free trade. To-day Ireland was once a center of the free trade in Congress during the last thirteen years, and the New York Free Trade Club is but a branch of the Cobden Club. If England should succeed in having free trade adopted, she would ruin the welfare of her State—if the free trade party in England were fit to supply the world with iron and coal, she would have a greater triumph than she has ever had on land or sea with her armies or her navies. Well, may she work for it. The Democratic party is working for this end, and it is singular that that party which has been working-men and every time they go to the polls they cast a vote in favor of cutting down their wages one-half.

There is one country on earth that enjoys absolute free trade and according to the Democratic theory it ought to be the most prosperous and contented country in existence. That country is Ireland. Did you know that Ireland was once a center of manufacture of silks and linens and carpets? Did you know that she once had a protective tariff and collected great subsidies from England annually? Did you know that Dublin once had tens of thousands of spinners and weavers. England saw that she and Ireland were related. You have better soil and climate than we. We will manufacture and you can devote yourself to agriculture. Ireland consented and by the act of union agreed to give up the tariff. A census was taken a few years later and Ireland was found in Dublin where there were thousands before. Ireland was placed under the upper and nether millstones. England named the price of the raw material and the price of the manufactured product as well. A few years elapsed and millions of Irishmen starved to death. How is Ireland? Free trade. A few years more and millions came to this country driven away by English free trade. And the most amazing feature of the case is that four out of every five of these men when they get here go to work for the same man who starved them to death. If England had a rope around their necks on election day and could drag them to the polls, she would compel them to vote for free trade. How can bright witted Irishmen do such a stupid thing?

The revision of the tariff cannot be finished in the next session of Congress, and the Forty-eighth Congress will have to settle the question of the revision of the tariff. If it is Democratic, so sure as there is sunshine outside of Pittsburgh—[applause]—so sure will your iron workers get the same result. I know what I am talking about. I have been a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I know that the burden of the complaint is that the iron and steel industries are too well protected, and if they get into power the knife will go into it. A single member of Congress lost in Pennsylvania may make the House Democratic; the fight is terribly close. A Democratic majority in the House means a Democratic Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and Pennsylvania will pay a fearful penalty for all the crime of civil war in the State over a matter that ought to be settled within the party lines. The record of the Republican party is a glorious record, and now shall it be said of Pennsylvania that the grand old party, the party of a glorious history, the party that saved the Union, was stabbed to death in the house of her friend. I thank you for your attention and cheerfully give way to your next Governor. Senator Frye, dressed with wild cheers running through the hall, and as he sat down, General Beaver's crutches sounded on the stairs of the stage and his form appeared in sight. The band struck up "Hail to the Chief," and the cheering was renewed. GENERAL BEAVER'S REMARKS. Fellow citizens: I come to you from the banner Republican ward of Pittsburgh, and judging from the outpouring of the people whom I have just addressed, that ward means to stand in the solid column of the Republican party which is marching to the glorious victory which we are to carry through. I can here and find that Maine has joined Pennsylvania in that grand march, touching elbow to elbow, and the magnificent standard bearer of the victory won in Maine, comes with inspiring voice and manner to beckon us to see like victory in Pennsylvania. Men of Pittsburgh are you ready for the victory? Men of Pennsylvania, do you know where your duty lies? Are you ready to go in the way that duty leads? I believe you are. I believe you are at least endeavoring to find the path of duty and to follow it. I heard the closing sentences of Senator Frye's address, and I heard his reference to facts which jeopardize the interests of Pennsylvania. He knows but little of that family quarrel in Pennsylvania, of which he spoke, and I know that he knows what I know. I have to say on that subject I am limited by the position in which I stand to-night. I am limited by the confidential relations which exist, or should exist, between the gentlemen who are in Pennsylvania politics. I do not know the names of the gentlemen who are in Pennsylvania politics, and I do not know the names of the gentlemen who are in Pennsylvania politics. I do not know the names of the gentlemen who are in Pennsylvania politics, and I do not know the names of the gentlemen who are in Pennsylvania politics.

When Gen. Beaver moved back from the front of the stage, the music of his crutches marked time for cheers which shook the hall until the walls rang. [Laughter.] Let us move forward shoulder to shoulder with the pure platform on which your candidates stand and which they are pledged to support, and let us carry through the nation forward and make for the Republican party as glorious inner life as its outer life. Let us capture the skirmish line of 1882 and prepare for a sure victory in the contest almost upon us. A contest which may decide the fate of the nation for a quarter of a century, the campaign of 1884.
