TWO CITIES.

One built with toil, and cost and pride, And one needs to urge on. For one is the city of Life-Astir with noise and bustle; And one, unwont to noise and strife, Owns Death a mute apostle.

With equal thrift they bourgeon;

In one the tide of traffic rolls In flows and ebbs of passion. The hoarse bell in the other tolls A knell of fitful fashion. Spread, living men, your city wide,

The other city, by its side, Must grow with like expansion. For every house with roof and floor, That makes Life's city broader, Of narrow homes there must be more. Where Death is speechless warder.
