GEN. LEE AND GETTYSBURG. HOW HIS MOVE WAS MADE.

The latter part of June, 1863, presented the darkest days of the great civil war in Pennsylvania. General Lee had gathered the strongest army that he ever commanded for an aggressive campaign to transfer the seat of war from Virginia to Pennsylvania...

Frank Baywood was a decided blonde, bright, erratic, impatient and impetuous. He had a contempt for enemies old soldiers never felt. He was as impatient as a child over the slow movements of the army.

Baywood's heart ached. He remembered once, when a boy, that he awoke from a long illness, too weak to move either hand or foot, and while he lay in bed, he thought of those who had been his friends...

President Arthur's excursion to the north-west, the visit of distinguished foreigners to take part in the opening of Yellowstone park, and the completion of the Pacific railroad...

Both parties retired at once. Quick and sure as a flash, the batteries in camp which had wheeled into position on the river bank, retired again to the fort above.

Baywood had fallen in a cedar thicket where the fight had been most furious, and the dead and wounded lay thick about him. He had seen the men now disabled, dash at each other with faces furious with passion and hate...

Yesterday's Dreadful Accident. There were a good many accidents yesterday. There will be some to-morrow, and probably more or less to-morrow.

GEN. LEE AND GETTYSBURG. HOW HIS MOVE WAS MADE.

Mr. UNION, PA., Nov. 13, '83. Hon. A. G. CURTIS—DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request, I send you the account of how I came to send you the telegram of the concentration of the Confederate army at Gettysburg during the war.

As I have mentioned, Lee marched the major portion of his army to Chambersburg, where he made his headquarters for several days, and General Early and Rhodes pushed his wings down as far as Carlisle and York, and the insurgents' flag came near Harrisburg...

Johnny drew a bead and landed the pellet on the end of the woman's nose. But she did mind it, and raising in her wrath, scolded down on the small boy like a blizzard.

Our Kentucky belle is handsome, and attired in a modest white gown, presents no meretricious attractions. She is accompanied by a companion whom she is heard to address by the title of mother, and who is only slightly older and slightly less attractive than herself.

In the days gone by a citizen of Detroit who has lately been gathered to his fathers was a Justice of the Peace for one of the townships of the county.

While he was going for the cows on Wednesday last week, a lad in the employ of Ernest Ack of Saddle River, N. J., saw an eagle on the ground, which did not fly at his approach.
