OLD CUSTOMS. Have I hurt you, my poor Olive? said he.

"Entirely sure," he responded. "But I don't see why," she urged. "Because, my own precious one, Anderson answered, 'you are pure and true—you are unselfish and lovely. Octavia Weston was a mere sparkling will-o-the-wisp; you are a star, shining high above earth's mists and mists and mists.'"

"I am a star," she said. "I am a star," she said. "I am a star," she said. "I am a star," she said.

A Serious Joke. Several nights ago, at a circus performance in Arkansas, the conventional drunker man who goes into the ring and wants to ride that 'boss' played his part a little finer than he intended.

Forbidden Kisses. "Remember," said a Fort street physician to his wife, as he was leaving home for a few days, "and do not let the children kiss anyone."

General Sherman's portrait is the frontispiece of the January Century, and to commemorate his retirement from the army, the magazine prints an anecdotal sketch of his life, by E. V. Smalley.

"Are these all yours?" he asked, abruptly. "Yes," she answered. "Let me have them now, Mr. Anderson. Mrs. Sedley needs me at six, to get the infant class ready for tea."

"What is it you want, Octavia?" said Olive, brusquely. "I want you to sketch the letter G on this piece of paper. Something original and fantastic, you know, and illustrate it for me in gold-leaf and blue ink. I must have it this evening at 8 o'clock."

Self-Reliance. The habit of depending on others is an evidence of weakness. With many it is natural. From early childhood there are those who appear to need stronger persons to lean on.

Self-Reliance is dependence on self in emergencies and amid all the duties and struggles of life. Some idea of what we are—the habit of self-dependence—is a preparation for this. And in order to accomplish this, we believe the more responsibly children are made to assume at home, the better for them.
