

WYLDER'S ROCK.
It had been a long and tedious litigation. The Wylders had literally fought every inch of the ground, and had lost it at last. Philip Searle had spent a good deal of money, but he had won more money, as he well knew when he produced from among some musty old papers that unaccounted-for deed of which he had known for years, but never thought of pushing till he discovered that the barren and hitherto considered worthless acres of the Wylder's Rock property rested on a stratum of solid wealth; in short, were on a vast coal seam. There had been five in the Wylder family when the struggle began—the father, three sons and one daughter. Two of the sons, brilliant young men and promising lawyers, had been killed in a railroad accident on their way to the city on business connected with the lawsuit. Worry over the suit, and the horrors of losing his beautiful boys in so terrible a manner, had brought an attack of fever on the father, and he died the very day the suit was decided against him, leaving with his remaining breath a stern charge to his surviving child—to yield the Wylder's Rock to the Searles. The remaining son was a sufferer from spinal disease, confined to his couch or wheeled chair most of his life. A poor creature he was to resist anything, much less the enforcing of the decision of the court which had given his home to another. "I will resist," declared his young sister. "I will never yield."

'84.

SPRING WITHOUT BLOSSOMS.
Late a Life to Look for Joy—
Never too Late to Mend.
Readers of Hawthorne's "House of Seven Gables" will recall the person with which poor Clifford Parris was connected since his early manhood, and when he is in his prime, he is in his prime. Oh! give me my happiness, and let me be alone in the gloom of a New England autumn day.
In a letter to Messrs. H. H. Flick, of the "Somerset Herald," Mr. L. H. Titus, of Pennsylvania, N. J., says: "I have suffered untold misery from childhood from chronic disease of the bowels and diarrhoea, accompanied by great pain. I sought relief at the hands of physicians, and domestic remedies under the treatment of a complete series of medical men, but to no avail. I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor, and it has cured me. I am now a healthy man, and I am able to do my duty in the world."
