In 1868 it carried New York State by systematic frauds on a large scale at s to a secondary place, and the characters of the two leading candidates have been made, so far, the chief subjects of discussion. This is the most unworthy and unfortunate kind of political warfare. It is the reign of mud, rather than of reason and sound judgment.

There is but one thing that could in any way reconcile us to such a canvass—the implication that it grows out of the jealousy of the people for the good morals of their public officers. If we could be assured that the making and publishing of such charges grew out of an honest ing by characters, pictures or figures.
