

PHILOSOPHY OF TARIFF.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF THE AMERICAN SYSTEM.

Ex-Chief Justice Daniel Agnew Shows How the Fundamental Principles of the Elements of Democracy are Opposed to Protection.

The position of the Democratic party on the question of protection to American industry is equivocal; unaimed in Pennsylvania to be for it, in other sections against it.

The war of 1812 cut off supplies from England, and at its close left us without manufactures, agricultural prosperity or commerce.

The American system arose, advocated by such men as Clay and our own Baldwin. Its chief features are a tariff of duties to protect our infant manufactures against foreign competition.

But now came a change of policy wrought by the influence of that peculiar institution of the South, which solves all the future movements of the Democratic party, and which arose during the first term of general Jackson.

It was under the influence of this changed condition the importance of slavery became a supreme factor in Southern politics.

Now, in 1854, we have a Democratic platform purposely devised to prevent defeat, interpreted in the South as free trade, so much so that such free traders as Carlisle, Morrison, Hurd, Waterson and others stand on it.

Allow a foolish to run until it gets beyond the reach of medicine. They often say, Oh it will wear away, but in most cases it wears them away.
