neer George W. Melville, in his book unconquerable and adventurous An-glo-Saxon race has carved wherever duty was to be done or danger encountered--has often written in its own blood. Toil endured, peril confronted, privation submitted to, difficulties overcome, all with the singleheartedness and rmatte-of-fact mod-is adverted to but briefly, the story proper beginning with the separation of the boats of De Long, Melhistory of the search for De Long. Melville having accompanied the relief expedition under Commander Scheley, and a plan for reaching the sion. The book is bandsomely turn-across which seams run and rattle blocks of ice fifty feet high are puf-

He had been treating the child Several days later a friend met the with all the speed imaginable, until

A Bad Subject.

have his life insured. "I am in a

