WASHINGTON LETTER From Our Regular Correspondin WASHINGTON, May 2, 1885.

President Cleveland is greatly distressed and embarrassed by the continued illness of his private secreta-ry. He has often been heard to say that Col. Lamont is the only man in world whom he cannot do without. Executive business does not out. Executive business does not move with rapidity and precision at the White House now, and the Sec-retary is so completely broken down, that it is uncertain when he can re-sume his duties. The President's appreciation of him was illustrated on Wednesday when Col. and Mrs. Lamont and their two little children were installed as guests at the White House for an indefinite time. Col. Lamont has been quartered at the Arlington notel, and the President had him removed to the Executive Mansion, with his personal effects, little chairs, baby carriage, and all. The Presideni has been advised by physicians to give less time to offi-cial duties and more to recreation, than the lest he too become a victin of over work. As soon as he moves out to Soldiers' Home he expects to change his habits. He will drive to the White Bouse each morning to transact business, and then return, re-serving his afternoon and evenings for recreatian.

A tedious process is going on now in the United States Treasury vaults away down under the centre of the building. The office of United States Treasurer is about to pass from a Republican to a Democrat and as is customary when the keys of the money vaults change hands a careful count is made of the cash which Uncle Sam has on hand. There are $10,000,000 in silver dollars to be counted. The silver is in bags, 1,000 in each bag, and the manner of determining whether the contents of each bag is up to the standard is by weight. For five days three men have been leaning over a pair of scales and scanning the register. One man places the money bags on the scales, another looks at the register and tells the weight, and a third makes the entries in a note book. The scales are of the finest make, and sensitive to the most infinitesimal pressure, so that if one of the dollars in the one thousand contained a minute fraction more or less than the prescribed standard, the three men open the bag and count the contents. The clink, clink, of the silver goes on monotonously, and the count will consume about eight days more. The President has made a number of foreign appointments during the week, and seventy-five new Democratic post-masters every twenty-four hours is the work of the postoffice machine now-a-days. The Postmaster General is taking up the cases of fourth class postoffices at precent. There are about two thousand vacancies of this class. After they have been attended to, it is the intention to consider those where removals are in order. Reform so called in the Departments here goes on in about the same way. Tried, experienced and capable officials are turned out almost daily, to make room for novices of uncertain or bad
