

A LAND ALMOST UNKNOWN

On the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad.

A TRIP TO THE ZUNI COUNTRY.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., July 15.—The completion of the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad between Albuquerque and the Mesquitas opens a tract of country heretofore little known and difficult of access.

ADOBE COMMUNAL DWELLING. Taking a train for the west, we soon come in view of the pueblo or village of Laguna, to the right of the railroad, and built upon a rocky eminence without any communal dwellings.

A few miles further on we reach McCarty's Station. The pueblo of Acoma is twelve miles from this station. It is one of the most interesting and interesting in New Mexico.

From the summit of the divide we looked over the Pacific slope. The trail rushed down the slope at the rate of fifty miles an hour.

At Gallop station we were surprised to see lines of cars loaded with coal, mined here at the rate of 200 tons per day.

From the plateau we had an extended view up and down the valley for many miles. The towering mountains beyond the entrance of the canon were guarded at the entrance of this strange village.

Sixty miles further west we dashed over the Canon Diablo, a forbidding chasm to the level plain, spanned by an iron bridge.

Thirty miles further on we came to Flagstaff, a brick little village nestled under the shadow of the San Francisco Mountains.

When you hear that she had to go in the hot sun nearly half a mile down the steep, rough rocks to reach the pool, and that the jar held two gallons of water, you can appreciate her exert.

"Didn't I Dan?"

"Jimmy had you watered my horse this morning?"

"Yes, uncle, I watered him, didn't I Dan? I asked, turning to his younger brother."

"Of course you did," responded Dan. The gentleman looked at the boy a moment, wondering at little Jimmy's words; then he rode away.

"This was Mr. Hartley's first visit with his nephew, and thus far, intelligent faces and kind behavior. Still there was something in his appeal to his brother that impressed him unfavorably, he could hardly tell why; but the cloud of disfavor had vanished from his mind when, two hours later, he turned his horse homeward. Just in the bend of the road he met his nephew Jimmy, bearing a gun over his shoulder.

"Did your father give you permission to carry that gun?" he inquired.

"Yes, sir," replied Jimmy; "didn't he Dan?"

"Of course he did," said Dan. "And of course I believe you, Jimmy, without your brother's word for it," said Mr. Hartley.

Jimmy's face flushed, and his bright eyes fell before his uncle's gaze. Mr. Hartley noticed his nephew's confusion, and rode on without further comment.

"This map of North America is further executed did you draw it, Jimmy?" asked Mr. Hartley that afternoon, while looking over a book of drawings.

"Yes, sir," replied Jimmy, with a look of conscious pride, then turning to his brother added, "didn't I Dan?"

Mr. Hartley closed the book and laid it on the table.

"Jimmy," he began, "what does this mean? To every question I have asked you to-day you have appealed to Dan to confirm your reply. Cannot your own word be trusted?"

Jimmy's face turned scarlet, and he looked as if he would like to rush from his uncle's sight.

"Not always," he murmured, looking straight down at his boots.

"My dear boy, I was afraid of this," said Mr. Hartley, kindly. "This boy who always speaks with confidence, and who never contradicts me from another, do you mean to go through life always having to say, 'Didn't I Dan?'"

"No, uncle, I am going to try and speak the truth so that people will believe me as well as Dan," said Jimmy impulsively.

Mr. Hartley spent the season with the nephew, and one day he left him the pleasure of hearing people say, "What's come over Jimmy Page? He never says lately, 'Didn't I Dan?'"

Mr. Hartley thought it was because Jimmy was gaining confidence in himself. "Do you, children," said the father.

Philadelphia's Riches: Man. For the most part the largest fortunes here are ascertained in the United States, have been made by the men who own them.

LAZY PEOPLE.

How is it that lazy men manage to make a mark in the world?

The poet Thompson wrote some of his best verses in bed. The philosopher Alost of Concord, in this State, was an invalid by an ex-Concordian.

Very violent man when in his country. They used to say in Concord that the Platonic philosopher would gently acquiesce in the doing of all the hard household work by his daughters, who have since come to fame.

But his mind was far from being at the shores of India or Germany. Thoreau, I am convinced, was just lazy. He liked to loaf and invite his soul seven days in the week.

The same ex-Concordian tells me that if it had not been for the surreptitious conveyance of baskets of provender to the hut of the hermit on the shores of Lake Wewabton, Thoreau would have starved. It is easy to play independence of the world when your sisters fry doughnuts for you and send you cold gold corned beef on the quiet.

Governor Kent of Maine, now dead, was an easy-going man. When a student of Harvard he was president of the "No Club," and one day was actually seen running across the college campus.

After a suitable delay, for the lazy club could not hurry anything, he was tried, and his plea which had to be accepted, was that he had been pushed by some one and was too lazy to stop.

One of the most famous of the late Hon. Ensign Kellogg of Pittsfield. He was a brilliant man, of great strength of mind, and held some offices, the latest being that of commissioner under the treaty of Washington.

He could have been Governor and almost anything in the State, but he would rather put on slouch hat and go fishing than hunt himself overhard.

Another public man in this State who has been nearer the Governor ship than he ever will be again is so lazy that his friends can not poke him up to any work, and he vegetates in a comfortable chair, reading papers and extraordinary talents being continually conjoined with bodily indolence.

And, after all, a lazy man is to be admired these rushing, toiling days, when heart disease is on the increase, and men with "ticks" are in such a state of excitement as to arrest or punishment according to law.

Sixty miles further west we dashed over the Canon Diablo, a forbidding chasm to the level plain, spanned by an iron bridge.

Thirty miles further on we came to Flagstaff, a brick little village nestled under the shadow of the San Francisco Mountains.

I cannot here detail the manners and customs of these people. I have found them using several implements, duplicates of which have been found in the graves of the Mound Builders.

I saw you coming over the plain. Knowing that you would water when you got here, I went to the pool and brought it for you.
