on to Culpepper, where he went into close retirement for several days and was seldom seen by anybody. Asking an officer at Culpepper one day what had become of the General, he replied to me: "Oh, the General is keeping as close as possible, studying out the plan of the coming campaign."

THE FIGHTING THAT FOLLOWED. The famous forward movement of the Army of the Potomac under Grant across the Rapidan commenced at daylight on the 3d of May, 1863, and was, as all readers are aware, followed by the famous Wilderness, Spotsylvania, North Anna, Cold Harbor, and culminated in the taking of Richmond and Lee's surrender at Appomattox.

On the memorable morning of the 12th of May Hancock made his celebrated charge at Spotsylvania and captured General Edward Johnson and his division. The fighting was terrific and the rain was falling in torrents and found us at that moment.

THE SOUTH BRINGS FLOWERS. THE LAST OF THE GIANTS. Grant is the last of that first group of giants called into being by the second epoch of American history.

THE GREAT CHIEFTAIN. THE GREAT CHIEFTAIN. Excepting perhaps Washington no American occupies so conspicuous and enduring a place in the history of the world as General Grant.

ON THE NIGHT OF THE DAY THAT GENERAL LEE SURRENDERED TO GENERAL GRANT AT APPOMATTOX I MET GRANT AT CITY POINT.

DEATH OF GENERAL GRANT. The long and painful struggle of General Grant with the great de-stroyed ended yesterday morning.

GENERAL GRANT'S PROCLAMATION. HARRISBURG, July 25.—The following proclamation was issued this morning: EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, HARRISBURG, Pa., July 25, 1863.

A COMMON GRIEF. While the North remembers that General Grant received the sword of Lee the South will not forget with grateful and soldierly contentment that he returned it.

when he would be dead as he was in arranging his campaigns. He even designated what the burial services were to be, wishing to relieve his family of such care as possible. All that he wanted of the future was to be allowed to do his duty to do is to follow out the wishes directed of his father, and thus far nothing has occurred to suggest an addition. Another more beautiful thing is a letter which he wrote to the family before his death for the future guidance. If it should ever be made public it will show the General in an aspect which entitles him to the highest esteem. One morning in the spring, about five o'clock, he was seated in his chair and death seemed very near. It knelt beside him and he said: "Dr. Knelt, besides him and that the prospect of the future is pure and bright, General." "Oh, yes," said he, speaking feebly but with the most intense assurance. In a subsequent conversation he said: "Three times I have been in the shadow of the valley of death, and I am referring to the words of the Psalmist: 'In the words of the Psalmist: 'In the shadow of death I was troubled, but I was rescued from the power of death.' What your supreme thought when you supposed that you were going?" His answer was: "That I had tried to lead a good and honorable life; that was my chief consolation. Another time, I think in the same connection, he said: 'In one of those supreme moments I had a dream or a vision, I could not well understand which. But it seemed that the lower part of my house was a church and that I had the keys to it. I looked around the room, but I did not see any church. An impression that he had been in a church.' Most significant, too, I think, was that letter which he wrote to Dr. Douglas, where he spoke of his thankfulness that he had been allowed to finish his book and make all arrangements for the future, so that he could say he was fully prepared to die.
