The central floral piece was an eliptical mound of orchids and azileas, with assels of begonia resting on the long mitror which extended lengthwise of the table. The pink ezeless in this were arranged in the shape of an hour glass. On either side were all gilt baskets of orchids, hyacinths, olips and camelias; plumes of hyconth ornamented the railing of the cirror at regular intervals. Beyond the stands of fruit at the transverse sections of the table were large cart wheels fermed of pink and white zeleas. The cut tiers of similar rum the centre of these rostic haskets were almost hidden beneath beir weights of orchids and birds of aradise flowers.
