The bombs ought to be completed that evening as they were to be used that night. When the witness left the house in the evening, Lings accompanied him, and they carried a little trunk containing the bombs. They took them in through a side door into a hall-way. There the trunk was opened and several people came to look at the contents. I saw, said the witness several men take bombs. I took two and put them in my pockets. Then we went away, leaving the bombs in the passage way. The hall back of Neff's saloon, witness said, was called the "shanty of Communists."
