Managing Manures. Among some farmers there is a comlaint that their horses manure "fire langs" or passes through the heating process which is so intense that the manure is well burned up. This exceedingly injurious to the manufe, and can, and should be prevented. It occurs, or is liable to occur, when the manure is thrown loosely onto a pile, and without being disturbed, will commence to generate heat. Horse manure has a stronger tendency in that direction than that of most any other animal, and this can be prevented, and the value of the manure maintained, if attended to as it should be. There is no trouble where, as is sometimes the case, horse manure is cast into a hog pen, as it is then worked over with the bog manare, whereby both are improved. Another method which is equally as effectual in preventing heating, is to cart-the same under a shed, where cattle are accustomed to tred or to lie; when packed thus closely, and wet, as it occasionally must be, by the urine of animals, it is kept moist until wanted for use. The same practice in connection with sheep would be valuable, and equally as effectual. We have always found that any manure that left to itself, thrown loosely into a pile, was liable to become heated, when packed tightly under the tread of animals, would be preserved with all its manureal value retained. Sheep manure, while thus kept closely packed, excluding the air, will not heat, but when loosely pitched into a pile will soon heat and expel the valueable elements of fertility.

Three Effects.

The thousands of remarkable cures which have been accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla are due simply to three effects which this great medicine has upon those who take it: First.—It purifies the blood, long retain its hold. It is forced to leave the system, giving place to health and strength, through the potent influence of Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sold by all druggists. Try it. A Crow that Said "Oh, Pa."
