He was covered with black from his forehead to his rump, and his fish an I skin actually hung in strips and tatters from bis head and sides. Giving his head a shake that scattered blood in a shower about him, and gave him a moment's sight of the reeking bear in front of him, he lowered his head for the fourth timeand again made one of his terrific charges. When the dying bear had dragged him off away from the buil the engles actually swooped down upon him and the wolves surang from the thicket into the opening and prepared to pounce upon him. The bull scattered the impatient birds and animals as he swept on his final charge against the grizzly, and they hastily departed, shricking and snarling. The cattle again added their bellowing to that of the bull's, acted as if they understood the favorable turn the fight had taken. As the bull harled himself against the grizzly the latter braced himself for a last desperate struggle.
