The Area Devoted to Leading Crops.

The total area of cultivated land wislens from year to year with new territory, but the comparative area devoted to principal crops, according to The National Statistician, early changes but little. It occasionally occurs that file acrespy disvoted to same of the principal emps in inaviolably largely argmented at the expense of others, as was the once with outs and corn planted on extensive areas of winter killed wheat, in 1885, but the next season will show the balance again naturally adjusted. The present year has witnessed this forced change, but only to a limited extent.

New Jersey and Pennsylvania out numerous fields of winter killed wheat into corn and oats, while in Ohio the area devoted to the latter gmin is much enisrged at the expense of both whear and lover injured by the winter. The New England states show little variation in the told area. In New York the increased importance of dairying and stock mising is gradually widening the breadth of neadow and posture land, though there appears no diminution of cultivated area. Tobacco, says Statistician Dodge, is the univ crop the area of which is reduced whenever grown. At ruling prices it is remunerative in New England and Pennsylvania, and a considerable portion of its area is being devoted to small crops. Maryland, Virginia and North Carolina show a heavy decline, the area in the first state poing to grass, and in the others to grass and the spring cereals together Some counties in these states evenet that the acreage will fall off 50 per cent. and in some cases even more. The falling off in Tennessee and Kentucky is general though not so heavy, the area being given to miscellaneous crops.

The southern states show the usual increase in cutton acreage, with perhaps a greater extension of the cereals than peral. In the Carolinas the increas is this year in corn, while in Georgia the area of that cereal is much divided by the poor stand and prospect of outs. Lousiana and Mississippi are mising more outs, and Texas has largely increased her area of ents in Arkansas remark the planters are finding no money in cotton at six and eight cents per pound and are devoting more room to both corn and oats. There is but little general change in wheat acreage, the section of some areas. to grass and other crops in the older states being balanced by fresh lands in others. In the states of the central west it is perhaps narrowed somewhat, while in the northwest and transmississippi states the deficiency is made up. In Iowa and Missouri corn has gained this year at the expense of wheat and in the latter state of mendows injured by the severe winter. More than the usual attention seems to be devoted to use of flax, the area being reported as increased in some counties in New York, Michigan and states of the northwest. The states and territories into which the tule of immigration is stealify pouring show marked increases in the total cultivated area, though the portions devoted to the principal crops are not materially changed.
