Julius Casar first attracted attention through the Roman papers by calling the attention of the medical faculty to the new justly celebrated Casarian operation. Taking advantage of the advertisement thus attained he soon rose to prominence and flourished considerably from 100 to 44 B. C., when a committee of reoresentative citizens and property-owners of Rome called upon him, and on behalf of the people begged leave to assassinate and that, no matter how high party spirhim as a mark of esteem. He was stabbed twenty-three times between Pompey's Allar and II o'clock, many of which were mortal. This account of the assessination is taken from a local paper and is graphic, specinet, and lacks the rensational elements so common and so lamentable in our own time. Casar was the implacable for of the aristocracy, and refused to wear a plug-hat up to the day of his death. Sulla once said, before Casar had made much of a showing, that some day this young man would be the ruin of the aristocracy, and twenty years afterwards, when Cosar sacked, assussinated, and holocausted a whole theological seminary for saying "eyether" and "nyether" the old settlers recalled what Sulla had said.

It can hardly be doubted that doom of the bustle is scaled. An argument aginst it has been found—and found by a woman too-which will appeal directly to the great majority of the fair sex.

The woman who has had the courage to put her foot, figuratively speaking, on her own bustle, as typical of bustles in general, hails from Bridgeport, Conn. She occasionally acts in amateur theatricals, if the reader will allow that anybody ever did act in amateur theatricals. Perhaps she had better be permited to describe in her own words the event that finally and firmly prejudiced her against the bustle. She says: One part of acting required a faint, and in doing that I was to fall into the arms of an old bachelor. Now it so happened that the gentleman who was to take the character of a bachelor was one in reality. We were rehearing and when I ice and hellishness which characterized 25 and 50 cents; White Hemstitched 121 came to the fainting spell I began to fall and that old bachelor began to back out of the way. You see, I am quite heavy and I thought at first he feared that he would be unable to hold me. I kept backing toward him and he kept backing away. Finally I became angry, and turning toward him, said, "Why don't you do your part right and eatch me as I am falling?" He replied, "Why, I am afraid I will spoil your bustle if I do," Now, nine men out of ten hate women's ger-We carry the largest stock of good to
