REV. A. H. NORCROSS, D. D.,

Three, Four and Five years old, two im-ported, one high grade, solid colors, well-made, heavy, substantial horses. Also,

George Brooks, who went from Happ-ner to Montana with Sam Carmack and herded for him a long time, has returned, reports the Heppner (Ore.) Gautte. He says he left Sam's ranch last spring and went prospecting in the wild Big Horn mountains. He did not find much minral, but claims that he did make a good oil strike, and that he is going to return to it after he makes a stake herding. He says that his prospect is in a pool in a hidden and wild gully of the Big Morn mountains. The pool is sunk in solid rock, is circular in form, is about one hundred feet in circumference, waters of an unfathomable depth, and is covered with a sheet of oil, unbroken and nearly pure, to a thickness of nearly six ches. The oil is rapidly generated from the pool depths, the quantity rising above the six-inch level being carried off through numerous orifices in the pool's rocky sides in constantly fed rivulets. These rivulets fall into an enormous cavity in the earth, which yawns apparently bottomless, close at hand. But this oil pool has also oil fish. These fish are in shape not unlike the eel family, and have a decided advantage over their fresh water prototypes in slippery characteristics. This singuler fish is very active in movement and darts to and fro in its native oil with an almost inconceivable velocity. As the oil fish moves it leaves a luminous | wave, and after nightfall the surface of the pool presents the brilliant appearance of a never-ending flame wave. The fish is easily caught with a hook and line and never tires of biting a piece of fat pork and fragments of candle. It fails to tempt the appetite to any great extent, as the frying pan reduces its flesh to a pan Pa. of oil. It is good for purposes of illumination. Placed head downward in a receptacle prepared for the purpose the tail end is ignited and the oil torch thus obtained illuminates the cabin or dugout with a glow as brilliant as it is cheap, convenient and unique. The water of the pool is rather cold immediately below the oil surface, but grows hot as greater depths are penetrated.
