Wonderful Courage. I would like to contribute the following story, which was told to me while on duty at Favetteville, Tenn, in the enright spring of 1864, by an eye witness, binsself a Confederate soldier, but at the time he told it, on a self-granted furlough from his command. Every incident of the story was afterward confirmby others who did not seem to enjoy the elling of it very much.

It was a pleasant Sunday morning in April, 1862, when a group of twenty or more of Fayette-ille's leading citizens were gathered around the entrance steps of the principal hotel in town discussing the cowardice and poltrocary of the citizens of a small village in the same county some ten or fifteen miles distant, who the day before had allowed a small company of Union cavalry to enter their village and ride away unmolested, and fill-Hatenspune, April 22.—The platform, ing the air with their threats of slaughter that would follow should any farce of miles distant-attempt to enter their
