What burdens this desire for show, this eager false aping after a richer neighbor imposes on the poor. The physcian's fee, and the necessary cost of attending the sick and a decent burial are usually hard enough to meet, but add to this all that pride and a false idea of respectable funeral imposes, and the financial straits to which many are reduced are not only pitiable, but also eriminal. A proper respect for the dead does not require many a costly carriage, an expensive ary wearing of mourning apparel. Display and all needless expense should be avoided Death ought to be humbling to pride.

As be ought to be, and generally is, opposed to unnecessary Sunday funerals, the funeral can generally be made to take place on a week day. Let church authorities have a standing resolution forbidding their paster to officiate at unnecessary Sunday funerals; or let pastors give frequent notice that they will officiate at no Sunday funerals unless abso 5th. Another reform needed is that of funeral processions moving faster. It is now almost the universal custom to drive no faster than a slow walk. This is done out of respect for the strange and false idea that a faster gait might somehow injure the dead. Such a gait, indeed. may be great cruelty to
