SWATHS NOWN AS THROUGH PRAIRIE GRASS. Spreading back Long street southward a swath two blocks in depth was mown as through prairie grass. At the costly brick block belonging to J. H. Bierly the fire turned north on Courtney street, which it followed to the Nicholson House, the last building that fell in this direction. East of Courtney street the flames spread over wider ground, and the burned district here is almost half a mile wide.

Fine homes that covered the hillside went down like cord wood houses, and a large majority of the people only escaped with the clothes they had on. West of the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburgh Railroad the flames swept a quarter of a mile, stopping only across the street from the Bell, Lewis & Yates Company's store. Circling around to the south towards the cometery, another scope of ground, fully a quarter of a mile quare, was swept clear. and piercing the masal cavity.
