ST. JACOBS OIL
TRADE MARK
THE GREAT REMEDY FOR PAIN
INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM.
UTTERLY HELPLESS AND CURED.

PROMPTLY.	PERMANENTLY.
The "St. Louis Post-Dispatch" says: "Mrs. Phebe Rice, 1209 Madison Street, states that for the past seven years she had been a sufferer from acute inflammatory rheumatism, which had affected the muscles of the hands, contracting them so badly she could not comb her hair, hold a needle or pick up a pin, and rendered the lower limbs so helpless she required crutches to move about. During ten months she was obliged to carry the right hand in a sling.	"A single application of St. Jacobs Oil, she said, made her a firm believer in its virtues, as the effect was instantaneous and she was greatly benefited. The continued use of it brought her to the happy condition in which the reporter saw her, with the free use of her limbs and its perfect health—cured. She can now run up and down stairs, she said, and her duties were as much at ease in every respect as they had been before she began to suffer, seven years ago."

THE PROOF.—The best always first and cheapest. The best is the promptest, safest, surest, most permanent. The benefits are beyond price. St. Jacobs Oil is the best.
Sold by Druggists and Dealers Everywhere.

Dress the Hair
With Ayer's Hair Vigor. Its cleanliness, beneficial effects on the scalp, and lasting perfume commend it for universal toilet use. It keeps the hair soft and silken, preserves its color, prevents it from falling, and, if the hair has become weak or thin, promotes a new growth.
"To restore the original color of my hair, which had turned prematurely gray, I used Ayer's Hair Vigor with entire success. I cheerfully testify to the
of this preparation."—Mrs. P. H. Davidson, Alexandria, La.
"I was afflicted some three years with scalp disease. My hair was falling out and what remained turned gray. I was induced to try Ayer's Hair Vigor, and in a few weeks the disease in my scalp disappeared and my hair resumed its original color."—Rev. S. S. Sims, Pastor U. B. Church, St. Bernice, Ind.
"A few years ago I suffered the entire loss of my hair from the effects of fever. I hoped that after a time nature would repair the loss, but I waited in vain. My hair would grow to the length of a few inches, but was dry, lifeless, and of a natural color, and finally fell."—J. H. Pratt, Spofford, Texas.

HIS SON'S WIFE.

"I'm afraid she's a poor, feeble critur'," said old Mr. Bayliff, shaking his head. "Ten o'clock Monday morning, and the washing ain't out yet. It ain't the way your mother used to keep house, Hector. Eh? how? Where ye goin' now?"

Hector Bayliff had left the ox-yoke he was mending, and crossed the green dooryard with a rapid step, to take the heaped-up clothes-basket from the hands of a pretty, slender young woman who had just emerged from the kitchen door.

The old man uttered an audible snort of disgust.

"Well, I never!" said he. "If Hector hain't left his work to wait on that wife o' his'n! It ain't a man's work to carry clothes out, no way you can fix it. If you do it once, you'll be expected to do it twice. And Hector's wife is clean spoiled already. It ain't the way I managed matters when I was first married to Hector's mother. What ye been doin'?" sharply, as the young man once more returned to his work.

"That basket was too heavy for Cynthia to carry," said Hector, curtly. "I wish I could afford to keep a girl for her."

"A girl!" Mr. Bayliff's voice betrayed mingled astonishment and contempt. "A girl! Your mother—"

"Yes, I know, father," interrupted Hector. "But things have changed since then, and perhaps mother would have been alive now, if the housework hadn't worn her out before her time."

"That's a downright flying in the face of Providence!" said Mr. Bayliff, reddening to the roots of his stiff, iron-gray hair. "It was the Lord's will that your mother should be took away, and there ain't no sort o' doubt but that she's better off. And Cynthia won't never stand in her shoes, no way you can look at it!"

Hector Bayliff made no reply, but took up his ox-yoke and went across the fields with it.

"Father may say what he pleases," said he to himself, "but mother died of overwork and undercare, and nothing else. And the household duties are too heavy for Cynthia, and I must see what can be done to lighten them. No woman shall be drudged to death under this roof now."

Cynthia Hough had been a pretty factory girl when Hector Bayliff had married her. She had been ignorant of all the details of housekeeping, but she had exerted herself diligently to learn.

Old Mr. Bayliff, however, was an exacting critic, and the Bayliff farm-house was a big, rambling, inconvenient place, where one might work hard all day, and have very little to show for it at the end. And the tired look in her eyes, and the weary flush on her cheek, went to Hector's heart at times.

"My darling," said he, "I wish I could make things easier for you."

"Oh, they are easy enough," said Cynthia, brightly. "It's only that I am too stupid to manage as I ought."

Hector shook his head. He knew that something was lacking, but he did not quite comprehend what.

But she drooped so that he saw some radical change was necessary.

"Cynthia," said he, "this won't do. You must go to stay with your mother for a week or two, and rest and recruit."

"But what will you do, Hector?"

"We'll keep bachelor's hall, father and I," said the young man, cheerily. "What does it signify to us, a little inconvenience, so long as you are benefitted?"

So, rather unwillingly, Cynthia went. Old Silas Bayliff shook his head forebodingly.

"If this is the way you're goin' to baby that wife of your'n, Hector," said he, "You'll bev her playin' sick the whole time. I don't hold to lettin' women think themselves too important. Now we shall be obleeged to have Mary Jenkins here to do the chores an' cook, and it'll cost us a dollar and a half a week at the very least. Tain't what I call economical housekeepin'."

"That depends upon what one calls economy," said Hector, quietly.

But when his neighbor, Luzon Perkins drove past that afternoon, with his wife, Hector called them in, secretly rejoicing that old Silas was down in the swamp lot, capturing a refractory calf.

"You're not in a hurry, Luzon, are you?" said he. "Sit down a minute. I want to ask your wife's advice."

"A pretty thing to do," laughed Mrs. Perkins, "when you've got a wife of your own."

"It's about her that I want to consult you," said Hector. "The work here is too heavy for her. She don't seem to get along with it, and I don't know why. Now, Mrs. Perkins, look around this kitchen, and tell me what you would do to it if you lived here."

Mrs. Perkins took a leisurely view of the premises, letting her eyes rest on one portion after another, with meditative slowness.

"Well?" said Hector.

"In the first place," said Mrs. Perkins, "I wouldn't have this room for a kitchen at all, if I lived here. Its damp."

"Damp?" echoed Hector.

"As blue mould," nodded the oracle. "The cellar under it isn't properly drained, I am certain. And the windows look to the north, and I don't suppose there's sunshine in it all day. No—make a store place or something of this room, and take the sitting-room for a kitchen, where there's a bright lookout to the south, and a good cemented cellar underneath."

"I never thought of that," said Hector. "Well, what else?"

"Where do you get your water?" asked Mrs. Perkins.

"From the spring, under the hill."

"Do you mean that your wife has to bring all the water that you use up that hill?"

"Except the wash-water. That she dips out from the hogshead under the eaves," explained Hector, rather discomfitted.

"My goodness me!" said Mrs. Perkins, wringing her plump hands in comical dismay; "that's enough to break any woman's constitution!"

"It's what we've always done, said Hector. "I bring a couple of pails in the morning before I go to work and after I come home, but—"

"Nonsense! a mere drop in the bucket!" said Mrs. Perkins. "What you want is a sink, with water-pipes laid from the spring, and a good cistern, with a pump in the kitchen, and a washing-machine—"

"What's that?" said Hector.

"We'll show you if you'll come over to our house!" said Luzon Perkins, very cheerfully.

"And stationary tubs in the cellar," added Mrs. Perkins, "and a hot-water boiler back of the stove. That's the way to break work down instead of letting it break you down."

"I'll do it," said Hector; "I'll have all these things fixed up while Cynthia is at her mother's, if you'll just help me with your experience."

Mrs. Perkins nodded approvingly.

"It will add ten years to Cynthia's life," said she.

Old Silas shook his head more strenuously than ever, when he heard of these new plans.

"Hector," said he, "I believe you're gone crazy! The old ways was good enough for your mother; I should think they'd be plenty good enough for your wife."

But Hector was firm, and the old man lost his temper at last.

"I can't stay here and see you makin' ducks and drakes of the old place," said he. "If you're goin' to set your wife up for an idol to worship her, I shan't stand by and see it. I'll go to Ohio and visit my brother Elnathan's folks, and we'll see where these fine notions will bring you up. Anyhow, you needn't look to my money to get you out of the poor-house."

"No, father, I will not," said Hector.

And after he was gone, the repairs and improvements commenced in real good earnest.

Silas Bayliff had intended to stay a year in Ohio; but either the climate did not agree with him, or he didn't agree with brother Elnathan's folks, for he returned home some three months before he was expected.

"There ain't no place like home," said Silas. "And, bless me, how bright and nice things do look here! And I declare, Cynthy, you're like another woman! Your cheeks are as red as roses, and you step round as spry as a cricket!"

"Yes, father," said Cynthia, "the improvements in the house have made everything so much easier for me. I get the work done in half the time, and with a quarter of the trouble."

Bayliff looked around.

"The improvements, eh?" said he. "But they cost a sight of money."

"Yes, they certainly did," owned Cynthia.

"How much, now?" said Bayliff, with an interrogative upturning of his spectacles.

"Five hundred dollars," said Cynthia.

Old Bayliff could not repress a groan.

The interest on five hundred dollars at six per cent. is thirty dollars a year," said he. "Thirty dollars a year is a round sum; and all dug into the ground, as you may say—in pipes and drains!"

"Not quite, father," said cheerful Cynthia, opening the table-drawer. "Look here—my work is done so easily and quickly, nowadays, that I have a deal of time to myself, and here is my work from the shirt factory. Buttonhole-making and putting on the finishing touches, you see. I take it up when my dishes are washed and the work is over. I haven't been at it half a year yet, and I've earned a good deal more than thirty dollars. Look, here is my savings-bank book!"

"Well, I de-clare!" said Silas.

"Hector objected to it at first," went on Cynthia, "but when I proved to him that I should still have plenty of time to read and garden and walk with him, he let me go on with it. So, you see, the improvements are really an economy."

"Well, I de-clare!" said Silas. "I dunno but what you're rightly, Cynthy!"

He walked out to the village building ground in the yellow flush of the twilight that evening, where the russet leaves were drifting down on a solitary mound, and stood there silently for awhile.

Perhaps he was thinking of what might have been, if he had been more considerate in the years gone by to the poor woman who lay there!

When he went back to the house, he met Hector.

"Hector, said he, "You did right to fix up the house to suit Cynthy."

"I am glad you think so, father," said Hector Bayliff.—Saturday Night.

An Incident.

On a railway train the writer noticed the entrance of a mother and little son who were unexpectedly greeted by a friend of the mother's. The friend was only going from one way station to the next, while the others were on a long journey. There happened to be but one vacant double seat in the car, and into this the boy slipped, taking the seat next the window. His mother, eager to improve the ten minutes with her friend, asked her son to give up his seat and take another for that little time, so that she could sit with her friend.

"No, I won't; because I want to sit by the window, and all the other seats have people already at the windows."

"But, darling, only for ten minutes, and then you can sit by the window all day."

"No, I won't go. I want to sit by the window now."

"But, dear, not to give mamma pleasure?"

"No!"

"Not for just ten little minutes, when mamma wants so much to talk to her friend, and you can sit by the window the whole day long?"

"No!"—with impatient emphasis. And in spite of humble entreaty from the mother, and good natured urging from the friend, that home-nurtured bit of selfishness kept his place, the mother never dreaming of insisting on the right and courteous thing, but murmuring gently that "Bobby did so enjoy looking out of the window." When 7-year old Bobby becomes Robert the husband, his sad little wife will wonder. "Why is it that men have so little tenderness for their wives?"—Century.
