Teaching the Young.

The Listener in the Boston Transcript has given several extracts from a book by Miss Caroline R. Le Row, of Brooklyn, called "The Young Isles," which contain examples of the results of mechanical rote instruction.

Miss Le Row begins in the middle of things with a sample school scene, which simply serves to illustrate the intelligence of the average tenesuent house pupil-The definition of the word "wicked." occurring in the reading lesson, is asked

" 'Cause they ain't got no manners'" The point in the introduction of this little colloquy is this:

That the teacher's "grade" obliges her to teach a great many words and ideas which are utterly beyond such pupils" apprehension. They attempt to learn the words before they do the things. The rote teacher exclaims; "Dictionary !" when the popil asks the meaning of a word.
