About 7 o'clock Mrs. Shanlis followed to the barn, milking pail in hand, and on entering that building called for her husband. Failing to get a response she returned to the stable door, and finding Mr. Shaults's eldert son. David, there, told him that his father was missing and that he should hard for him. David's wife was in the stable milking at the time, and after the senior Mrs. Shaulis had finished milking her three cows, the two women started for their homes. They had hardly crossed the road separating the barn from the houses, when the sharp crack of a rifle echoed among the hills and a well directed ball sped true to its mark, piercing the body of the elder Shaulia's wife. shrill cry of pain and horror rent the air and then the wounded woman staggered to her home, only some fifty feet away, while David's wife continued on to her
