A Common Sense Talk About Tree Planting Points in Transplanting—Conditions That Must Be Observed—How to Plant in Fall or Spring.

Thomas Meahan, one of Pennsylvania's foremost horticulturists, finds in his practice as well as in his own experiments that there is "really no best time to plant trees anywhere."

The authority referred to tells in Country Gentleman how to transplant trees and how to care for them.

Success depends on a number of incidents. A transplanted tree is in the nature of a cutting. The root taken with it is not of very great importance in themselves.

The biggest mass of fibrous roots to any tree is of no material consequence, unless it throws out at once young white fibers with root hairs.

It is no uncommon thing to see a tree with its roots cut off and yet to grow again.

One can readily see from this that there can be no general answer to the question whether it is best to plant in the spring or in the fall.

What is the best time for planting, then, each one must decide for himself. The last time to plant is when the roots will push out their new white hair tips.

There is no doubt that the best time to plant is when the roots will push out their new white hair tips.

It is not safe to send trees long distances on these conditions. The nurseryman must have his regular season for digging—about the first of the leaf in the autumn, and as soon as the frost is out of the ground in spring.

High Temperature for Churning. A butter maker, in an address before a meeting of New York dairymen, said: "It is almost impossible to churn cream from any two dairies at the same temperature."

In this he struck the keynote to churning. There is a difference in dairies as well as in individuals. The speaker said he churning cream in 20 minutes, while a neighbor did his churning at 60 days in twenty minutes.

John Brown's "Fort" in Danger. John Brown's "fort," the old engine house, which he had built by great and slavish labor and his followers thirty years ago as a place of refuge from the soldiers and citizens surrounding them, is to be demolished, and will disappear forever unless some one intervenes.

Withholding Salary. A case was decided in Watertown, N.Y., in which a man was held liable for the salary of a man who had been discharged from the service a year ago, and it is reported in favor of the railroad company.

Official Reviewing Station. The Marine band was one of the very few bands that passed the presidential stand at the review in Baltimore last Monday that did not play "Hail to the Chief."

It is a common impression among land matters, that the land is in silence so far as the tactics of "Hail to the Chief" is the proper presidential salute.
