to feel, only to see and do. He must dissect and describe, but not sympathize. Coolness is what he needs, not emotion. Yet all the stolidity in the world does not avail when scandal touches those who are near to him. He is one of the most sensitive persons in the world, with a wholesome horror of the newspaper notoriety that he helps to manufacture, and a keen contempt for those who like it. Walston was such a man. If he had been sent to report a case in which he had no personal acquaintance, he would have done his work with his usual unconcern; he would have gotten the facts and written them up for all they were worth.

But this affair was different. He knew Henry Doncaster and Margaret Doncaster. Mrs. Doncaster was his coosin. Mr. Doncaster had been his room-mate at college for four years. The Watson's home was then one of the pleasantest places in the State. It had a famed hospitality. Here he and Henry spent a large part of vacations. Here Margaret visited the Walston family. Suggestions to Dyspaptics.

"The place where we cat is heaven, and the place where we digest is the other place." These words must have been penned by a dyspeptic, one who was afflicted with an abnormal appetite. They come straight from his heart, or rather from his stomach, which is the instigatespecially when out of order, of many of our sentiments and actions. How many dark presentiments and dismal forebodings might be traced to indigestion, our unconquerable seasons of depression, spells of the "bloos," and even sudden fits of anger which are incompre-ensible even to ourselves.

It is a bad plan for one who is inclined toward dyspepsia to try to core it with nedicine, especially if he writes his own prescriptions, or accepts the remedies friends.
