The higher the duty, or the greater the alleged tax, the greater the comestic production and the cheaper Press has printed from time to time the dis, showing that that country buys SI per cent. of its brass goods, 80 per cent. of its copper goods, 94 per cent, of its cordage, 88 per cent, of its ginghams, 65 per cent, of its glass, 19) per cent, of its rabber, 54 per cent. of its carpets, 92 per cent, of its manufactures of wood, 91 per fair cent, of its tinware, and all of its binding attachments, grain drills, hay, straw and spading forks, harrows, harvesters, mowing machines, rakes and reapers, 91 per cent, of its hoes 14 per cent, of its plows, grew cooler. 01 per cent of its scythes, and 63 per cent of its spades and shovels from the United States. These figures, even allowing for export discounts, show that protection has made everything that the farmer buys cheaper than it would be if the American source of supply had not been developed by protection. Nor does the Dairyman tell us how the American farmer could compete successfally in foreign markets with the tencenta-a-day labor of India's wheat region. That cheap labor and the impossibility of competing with it would tell the farmer, if his own common sense did not, that it was time for him to study the question of diversifying his crops. What new crops could be raise instead of the ald ones, of which there was a surplus which foreign markets did not want? Why, here are crops which home markets do want as their raw material. Crops like flax, hemp, jute, sugar, beets, special breeds of wool, special varieties of eatton; and the American Dairyman crying for free raw materials so that the farmer won't be able to raise them ! The manufacturer who gets free raw materials can stand free trade in products better than the farmer can; but if he can't what will be do? Shut up his factory and go to farming raising at least his own provisions, and to that extent competing with the farmer. And every factory or workshop that is shut up by free trade transfers people from the customer's side of the farmer's balance sheet to the competitor's side, and hurts just as truly as to transfer a credit item to the debit

The Davignous sees this plainly enough when it talks of immigration, for its complaint here is that the railroads get land grants, "make arrangements with foreign mations to settle up their lands with their surplus paupers, and for the time being taking the products of these new sections at a there nominal figure, and placing them in our principal markets in competition with the products of the farm that cost a great deal more to produes." Not only the railroads get big land grants, but the immigrants can get individual homesteads directly from the government, and so can native born settiers. You see how new competitors hart the farmer; why do you want to turn more of his customers into competitors and to drive him to depend on foreign markets, supplied already by labor costing ten cents a day? Pickles and Jeilles

A Washington lady, formening the less of her income, tri used her mile to the breatening breeze. She carefully consi level her capabilities, and early in the spring decided to put her energies into the making of preserves, pickles and jellics. She knew holies of social prominence and secured the names as references. She had circulars printed, which she sent to people likely to respond with orders. She received enough orders to guaratee her enterprise, but presuming on further sales, she made about thirty gallons of pickles of various kinds, and 350 glasses of jelly and jars of fruit. As an experiment to test their popularity she made a dozen cans of brandied peaches, spiced currants and plants, sweet pickled melons, stuffed mangoest catsup and chow-chow. She spared no pains, attended personally to the marketing, procured the best fruit as fresh as possible, before it "lost the taste of the sun," and made everything with exquisite neatness. She put her jellies in pretty molds, end even lettered the labels attractively. Her energy and courage brought a success that warrants her enlarging the business .- Ladies' Home Jour-
