At length she approached the water pails, and taking a young one from her pouch, held it to the water to drink. While her baby was satisfying its thirst the mother was quivering all over with excitement, for she was only a few feet from the balcony on which one of her great foes was seated, watching her. The little one having finished drinking, it was replaced in the pouch, and the old kangaroo started off at a rapid pace. When the natural timidity of the kangaroo is taken into account, it will be recognized what unusual bravery this affectionate mother betrayed. It is a pleasant ending to the story to be able to state that the eye witness was so affected by the scene that

What a Blind Man Saw.

Many readers will remember the pathetic story of a mother afflicted with some disease of the eyes who was told by the oculiat that she would probably lose her eyesight soon and cuddenly. From that time until total blindness came on, she spent most of her time studying the faces of her children, thus fixing them forever in her memory. Only a degree less touching is the following account from the New York Tones of a blind veteran whose last look of the outer world made a permanent picture in his mind.

The other day an old man with silver hair was led into the Cyclorama of Gettysburg by a bright-faced little miss in a jaunty gypsy hat and dress, and sat down while she described to him the features of the picture in detail, occasionally asking her a question or shaking his head slowly as if in doubt of the accuracy of We are all creatures of habit, even in her account. Don't Rub the Eye. When you get a cinder or a speck of dust or other offensive particle in your eve don't rub it. Don't touch it. Don't pull down the lid. Don't put your hand pear it. Let it alone. This is very hard advice to follow, and in nine cases out of ten von will find yourself rubbing your eve before you know it. But if you can refrain from touching your eye at all the action of that organ will itself cast out the offending mote in much quicker time and with far less irritation, while your efforts would only hinder it and perhaps fasten the intruder so that it will stay a long time. Of course if it is a particle of metal you will consult a surgeon or oculist at once; but ordinary substances are best treated as above indicated. Some people say, "Rub the other eye," but this from that time torward he could never
