Feeling confident that this county would not present a candidate Mr. Cessna decided to ask for its endorsement at the primary election, and accordingly he had tickets printed and circulated with the belief that their being no other candidate he would meet with no opposition. His consternation and mortification may be imagin ed when the result showed that tickets for Koontz had been sneakingly distributed on the eve of the election, an appeal made to local pride, and that he was shamefully beaten. Three of Mr. Kooniz's friends were appointed conferees; he went with them to the conference and finding that he could not be nominated, induced them to cast their votes against Mr. Cessna. Hon. S. S.
