As a matter of simple economy it would be better to burn corn than wood as fuel all the year round if the corn is not needed for food. Over production of an article that ised for heating purposes in the store, sed never be a text for sentimental apos rophe. It takes a tree twenty to thirty years, stranges can replace? It is only the shock to a pressuceived idea that gets in its jere-niads on this subject. If the Western farmer's use of corn as fuel kent either mush or pone from his children's stomachs, then there would be occasion for lament. As it is, it costs him far less, grown on the spot, than the coal would delivered at his door.

It costs too much, when corn is plenty, to convey his surplus crop to a market ; so if he burns it to cook by and saves his trees thereby and his coal money, how can that be wasteful in a crop that will come again next year? There is more agricultural nonsense aired at this time than almost any other sort of nonsense which, in the silly senson, and even with the electric execution just passed,
