Farmers and the Tariff.

From the N. Y. Press.
Some plain and sensible remarks upon the relation of protection to farming were made recently in the United States Senate by Mr. Moody, of South Dakota. As the representative of a State whose population is largely engaged in agriculture, Mr. Moody has given especial study to the policy of protection as it effects his constituents. The Poss quotes with commendation these strong and convincing words from his speech ;

Now, Mr. President, the position I take is Now, Mr. President, the posterior in this: If more people were engaged in manufacturing and mining, and thus the consumption were enhanced, who could doubt but what the business of farming would be The trouble, is we pay too much to the

The trouble, is we pay too facts to the foreign manufacturer, whose operatives we cannot reach with our produce. If the millions which are expended annually for the products of the foreign looin and workshop were expended in our own country to pay the mechanics and laborers who would be necessarily engaged in like production here, here would be no complaint of depression in the business of farming nor in the prices What this country needs above all process es for its prosperity is the employment of all our people who are now idle, and an equaliof the different kinds of employment. Mr. Moody, with sound and philosophical easoning, has gone to the very heart of the tariff problem, and the Press commends his arguments to the consideration of farmers in other States than the agricultural commonwealth he represents. In another portion of his speech Mr. Moody, referring to talk about farmers burning corn for fuel,

The larmer on the Western prairie, though The larmer on the western practic, though he may not have at the time a remunicrative market for what he raises, remembers that prices are elevated and they are depressed.
