Dying Usually a Painless Exper-

The signs of impending death, says the Medical Journal, are many and variable. No two instances are precisely identical, yet several signs are common to many

Shakespeare, who observed everything else, observed and recorded some of the remonitory signs of death also. In the account of the death of Falstaf the sharpness of the nose, the coldness of the feet, gradually extending upward, the picking at the bedclothes, are accurately describ-

For some time before death indications of its approach become apparent. Speech grows thick and labored, the hands, if aised, fall instantly, the respiration is difficult, the heart loses its power to propel the blood to the extremities, which consequently become cold, a clammy moisture oozes through the pores of the skin, the voice grows weak and husky or piping, the eyes begin to lose their luster. In death at old age there is a gradual dulling of all the bodily senses and of many of the mental faculties, memory fails, judgment wavers, imagination goes out like a candle. The muscles and tendons get stiff, the voice breaks, the cords of the tabernacle are loosening. Small noises irritate, sight becomes dim, nutrition goes on feebly, digestion is impaired, the secretions are insufficient, or vitiated, or cease, capillary circulation is clogged. Finally the central organ of the circulation comes to a stop, and this stoppage means a dissolution. This is the death of old age, which few attain to. Many people have an idea that death is necessarily painful, even agonizing, but there is no reason whatever to suppose that death is a more painful process than birth. It is because, in a certain proportion of cases, dissolution is accompanied by a visible spasm and distortion of the countenance that the idea exists, but is as nearly certain as anything can be that these distortions of the facial muscles are not only painless, but take place unconsciously. In many instance, too, a comatose or semi-comatise state supervenes, and it is altogether probable that more or less complete unconsciousnes then prevails. We have, too, abundant evidence the statement that after a few moments of painful struggling, fear and anxiety ceeds. They see the visions of green fields and in some cases hear pleasing music, and so far from being miserable their sensations are delightful. But where protest against being brought back to life, and declare that resuscitation is accompanied by physical pain and acute

Death is a fact which every man must personally experience, and consequently is of universal interest, and as facts are facts, the wiser course is to look them squarely in the face, for necessity is coal black and death keeps no calendar.
