The proprietor of the shop was in when the young man applied for work. He liked his appearance, was satisfied with the amount of pay he expected to receive, and engaged him.

"Wast is your name?" inquired the

" tines," was the reply. " I'm a poor hand at guessing names," responded the hoss, but still he began trying. "Well," he said, "perhaps it may be Schmidt."

" No," said the young man quietly, but none the less deliberately, " Guesa," " Luts," ventured the boss.

" No," responded the young man with a smile, " Guess." "Haber," returned the boss, desper-

The young man shook his head, and again replied with an emphasis,

Guess. Then the boss showed signs of fatigue

" See here, young fellow, if you can't answer a civil question, I think you'd better look elsewhere for a fob. Now, sir, I am not in a humor trifling; what's your name?"

Curing Hams.

For pickling hams make a brine just strong enough to barely float an egg or a potato. Into this stir in sugar or molasses enough to give it a slightly sweetish taste. The following proportions will be found about right for one hundred pounds of ham: Six gallons of water, eight pounds of salt, three pounds of brown sugar and three ounces of saltpetre. Dissolve the saltpetre thoroughly FITS, EPILEPSY or before adding it to the pickle. A First Class War Story.

Gov. Cartin tells the following: "Riding over the field, just after battle of Spottsylvania, I came across a wounded Pennsylvania soldier. He was leaning against a stump, holding a bloody leg. 1 dismounted and asked him how he was. "Is the bone broken?" I inquired, as be explained his injury.

"No," said he, cheerfully ; 'only a bullet through the flesh.' Still he was faint ""What would you rather have just

" Then here it is,' I replied, extending my flask, 'You shall have it.'

"He took the flask, held it in his hands a second, then pointed at a dying Confederate soldier near by. 'Better give it to him,' he maid, 'he needs it more than I do, poor fellow. Yes, give it to him." We turned to the latter. For all we knew it might have been the very man who shot him. But we propped him up and attempted to pour some of the liquor down his parched throat. He heard every word and seemed to understand the sitpation thoroughly. It was too late. With a grateful look in his eyes, as he turned them a moment on the wounded Pennsylvania solder, he sighed deeply, and fell back dead.

Unprofessional Conduct.

Hamilton S. Beal was an exceedingly well known man. He lived in the Mississippi river bottoms, and having at an eurly age acquired a strong appetite for a sort of pudding made of the giblets of the swamp hog, decided to pactice medirine. For many years be held uninterrupted sway in the community known as Topelo Ooge, and it seemed that the aple had been "squashed" down into the belief that one of their principal aims in life was to be silently murdered by bim. In his daily practice he did not der iminate between man and animal. as a stilly as he would upon a township cons ble but for this we do not think any one can blame him. Recently a new doctor made his ap-nurse received no recognition. Old "Doc" Beal hooted at him, and told the people that when they felt disposed to die they should send for the fellow. One day a prominent man was taken violently ill, and Beal, after looking at him, declared that he was beyond recovery. The old "doe" was glad of this fatal illness, not that be had anything against the promient citizen, but because he might now have a chance to settle for ever the prospects of the interloping young physician Accordingly he advised the wife of he prominent man to send for Dr. Gill. The young doctor came, glad that he had at ast found an opportunity to exercise his skill, and a few days later the prominent man was declared to be out of danger. Old Beal had been out of the neighborhood and was returning home when he met the prominent citizen in the road. "Why, mussy on me, this ain't you, colonel ?"

"Yes, I reckon it is," the colonel an swered. "Why, when I left, you was about
