34TH ANNUAL SESSION OF THE TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

THURSDAY MORNING SESSION. Discussion—'Is the copy book a necessity, a convenience, or a nuisance?'

Opened by David Berkey, followed by R. R. Sanner and J. S. Felton. Opinion was divided.

Music, conducted by Prof. Smith. After the music Prof. Smith gave a lecture of a few minutes on what he called "rural culture."

To avoid hoarseness a speaker must bring his voice well forward in the mouth as if he speaks his tones back in the mouth.

Topical talk, H. F. Yost: "Order in the schoolroom."

Government is necessary because order is necessary; teachers of the former day appealed to the nerves through the medium of the rod; teachers of the present day appeal to the conscience through the medium of the mind.

The first requisite is to give pupils something to do; then, after you have given them something to do, keep them at it; the second factor is, recreation; children cannot work all the time; few children care to produce disorder; they like order and respect the person that can maintain it; the teacher needs strong will power; persons of strong will control those of weak will; good teaching is another requisite; secure the confidence of your pupils in your own ability; when pupils lack this confidence good order can't be maintained; many teachers talk of good and bad conditions; the best condition is the teacher of to-day is to make good conditions.

STOCKHOLDERS MEETING.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Somerset County National Bank, for the election of Directors for the year A. D. 1891, will be held in the banking rooms in the First National Bank Building, Somerset, Pa., on Tuesday, January 15, 1891, between the hours of one and three o'clock P. M.

perhaps in mortification and death. The most must go into the stomach. So the children of foreign parents, with all their prejudices and ignorance, must go into the schools. In the lower rooms of the schools of the great cities a vast difference is observable between the foreign and the native born children; but when they reach the higher rooms and the grammar classes, the difference has almost ceased.

According to the report of the Civil Service in 1887, Massachusetts was highest in the number of persons passing the examinations, while in 1888-9 Pennsylvania was the highest.

There is a great diversity between the system of education in Pennsylvania and New York. New York's system is based on the principle of centralization—that of Pennsylvania is just the reverse. In New York there are few persons controlling the machine—in Pennsylvania all questions emanate from the Central Board, and are uniform for the entire State. You know it is very different in Pennsylvania. In New York there is a board of men whose business it is to hold the county Institutes. They notify the Superintendent; he gets ready, engages hall, etc., and the Board alternate with one another in giving instructions.

You all know how this is managed. In the founding of our system there was adopted the principle of a minimum of centralization and a maximum of local control.

The system of education as we have it is in harmony with the genius of American institutions. Its founders endeavored to find out what was best adapted to the needs of our people, and they provided that there should be maintained a body of public schools. The State appropriation is now two millions of dollars, as against one million in 1874. It was not the object of this increase to diminish taxation, but to benefit the schools. If any districts have used the State appropriation to diminish taxation they have misunderstood the intent of those who made the grant. A short school term is expensive. To conduct the schools economically we must lengthen the term.

We want to see the day when the poorest school shall be better than the best to-day; when the child that has the poorest advantages will have greater advantages than the one that has the greatest advantages to-day.

A dictionary is a standard of pronunciation, accent, etc., just as a yard is a standard of length, and a gallon of liquid measure. Let every school have a dictionary.

An essential is that the best teachers be found and kept. The only question a Director should ask himself, who is the best teacher for that school? Visitation is an effective method of determining the qualifications of a teacher.

Teachers should receive sufficient salary to compensate them, and they must receive so much either by taxation or by a direct appropriation; that is by taking the money from the treasury. Pupils properly taught in the schools will be a credit to our country, and should there be a call to arm the youth of this day in consequence of their teaching in the schools will respond to the call with the same promptness as did the "Boy of '91."

County Superintendent, announced that this would be the last talk of the session by the State Superintendent, he having engagements elsewhere, and being compelled to leave on the train.

MUSIC BY PROF. SMITH AND INSTITUTE. Drawing by Prof. Little.

He commented by saying that the best answer is that known as the "Giant," and gave a reason that the felt ends are permitting the chalk dust to fall out and into the trough.

Drawing can be made much more valuable by the general teacher than by the special teacher. In drawing strive first for accuracy, and then for rapidity. Do your work as rapidly as possible. Don't stand too close to the board.

(Most of the speaker's talk was devoted to explanation of this drawing, done in free hand on the board, and their reproduction here is for obvious reason impossible.)

Modern spiritualism is another of the superstitious hangings of the day. I sincerely trust that when I am dead I shall not be called back to do the bidding of any woman on the face of the earth; and I hereby give notice that I won't come.

But, to particularize, there is the rich fool. A man is not a fool to be rich, but he is a fool if he isn't rich. Some men turn a fool if they touch into gold; others turn everything they touch into gold.

The miser—do you know a man who is rich for a miser. I hope I'll be forgotten for even knowing such a man. A man once said to me, "Mr. Toney, how did you make your money?" "I didn't make it," I said. "Miser, means miserable. The miser looks his money from himself as from a thief. He lives miserably and dies wretched."

Many people indulge in fine things that they say about people that are dead. A Dutchman at a funeral, in loss of anything else to say, said, after looking into the grave, "Well, he was a good school-er, anyhow."

Then again, there is the man who is rich by the force of circumstances made rich; driven among the aristocracy without knowing how to act. Shakespeare, in his "Taming of the Shrew," introduces a drunken tinker, named Christopher Sly. I've seen something like it—the man who through shrewdly or oil his wits. He dresses well, eat well, lives well. His library is bought by the yard; his wife is tricked out in finery, and he wonders whether he is a gentleman. I can say, no, Gentlemen are not made of such stuff.

Then again, there is the fool whose father has made the money the fool has inherited. Then there is the fashionable fool—the beguiled, perfumed fool, who parts his hair in the middle—a dot. Fools of this sort, I'm afraid, are the increase in Republican America.

Another fool, very common in Chicago—I hope scarce in Somerset—is the drunken fool. A judge making a temperance speech, said that
