The Boomerang Element in Latter Day Personalities.

Preoccupation with personality is certainly an American-possibly more or less a generally modern-trait; but our present arry of compliment is, I think, a new variant of it. And it cannot be that we are becoming Frenchified to the point of social insincerity for the mere sake of moral perversity. The truth probably is that as we progress in social civilization or perhaps better, as social civilization spreads increasingly and penetrates our bewildering and encouraging succession of senseller coorder-the desire to make one's self agreeable, instead of merely important, is increasing proportionately. Now, amenity as an art s a difficult one. To succeed in it demands either the "certain felicity" which Bacon affirmed to be necessary to the painter who would improve upon nature, or that long course of social civilization whereby tradition secures the sinking of effort in unconsciousness, and the substitution of inherited for acquired espacities. In the absence of either of these advantages it is the shortest rather than the wirest road to the end of being agreeable that is pretty; sure to be taken, and the grosso mosto pursuit of, as I said, the line of least resistance results in an amount and degree of personal flattery at the present moment which are altogether We have probably not yet wholly emancipated ourselves from the wish to be appreciated, as well as to be agreeable. On the contrary, when we praise our friends for their qualities or their performances in the blank and stark way sanctioned no doubt by our unquestioned sincerity, but dictated perhaps by an imperfect taste, it is probable that with our motive of being agreeable is very subtly associated a desire to be deemed discerntacit, to be sure, as to be unconsciousthat the fact of our appreciation of them attests to them acuteness in us. Our well-known and universally acknowledged gennineness-that heirloom inherited from the savages of the Elbe and Weser marshes-prevents our perspicacity in these circumstances from being
