Salaries of Old English Actors. Kean never spent more than two or three thousand pounds upon a revival. and this was considered marvelous in those days. Mesors, freing and Wilson Barrett have more than doubled such sums. Again, salaries were incomparably smaller. For some time John Ryder, who played second to Kess, received only three pounds ten shillings a week until, discovering that another notor of about equal position was in the receipt of eight pounds, he threatened to break his cagagement unless his salary was atonce doubled, a request which was complied with. Now such an actor would command from thirty to filty pounds a week. On the other hand, Keen raised the bullet girls from a shilling a night, their old pay, out of which they had to find shoes and stockings, to a guinea a week, and found them everything.-London Tit-Bits.
