

Spinoza at Newport.
Two or three members of the late Congress have occasion to remember the late general Spinoza from the thrush he gave them whenever they offered him battle at Newport. Elijah Adams Morse, the "Rising Sun" statesman from Canton Mass., is one of these members. He, in common with many others, joked the New York man about his high collar.

One day General Spinoza had the floor and was making a vigorous speech against some parliamentary ruling of the Speaker. The general had been overlooked by Mr. Reed when he was entitled to recognition. He was asserting his rights, when Mr. Morse interrupted him with the remark:

"Your collar was so high that the Speaker couldn't see you."
"I'll say to the gentleman from Massachusetts," retorted General Spinoza, "that if he had on a collar twice as high as mine, he would not be hidden. It would not cover his ears."

John J. Wilson, the youthful and enthusiastic member from Washington, also to his sorrow, crossed swords with General Spinoza. The New York man was speaking on some pension bill and took occasion to allude to a member of the Republican side as "the gentleman with the Shakespearean head who took no part in the war." He pointed in Wilson's direction, although he was not alluding to him. Wilson fled at once and objected to being singled out for an attack when there was no call for it.

"I object to the personal remarks of the gentleman from New York," he screamed.

"I was not referring to the gentleman from Washington," said General Spinoza.

"You pointed at me," said Wilson.

"That may be true," was the reply, "but the gentleman from Washington might just as well not mention to me anything about the war. He wasn't here then, and, besides, I never heard before that he claimed to have a Shakespearean head," retorted General Spinoza, and Wilson reached the cloakroom before the applause had subsided.

They Can Raise It.
A childless couple, having concluded the house was too quiet, besought their neighbor to adopt a child. To their proceeded to a nice respectable orphan asylum to see what there was in stock.

"We want a boy to raise," the husband said to the superintendent when that gentleman appeared.

"To raise what?" he inquired, with a peculiar gleam in his eyes, as a terrific racket resounded through the upper halls.

The husband and wife looked at each other for a moment.

"I guess we don't want a boy to raise," remarked the lady, and they said "goodbye" hastily. —Detroit Free Press.

A Bear in a Mine.
A large black bear entered a tunnel in the Santa Maria mine, in Toluome County, Cal., and attacked several miners. As the men realized their danger, which was made apparent only by the dim light of their candles, they grasped their picks and attacked the brute. The forerunner struck the bear first and drew blood. This infuriated the bear and made a resolute charge on the men, extinguishing nearly all of their candles and lacerating every one, more or less. One man named Dougherty had his scalp torn off by one blow of the bear's paw; others had the flesh of their arms laid bare. The contest in the darkness and close atmosphere lasted an hour, when the bear was killed, more by good luck than by skill. Exhausted as the men were, they dragged the bear out of the tunnel and took to their station. —Week's Sport.

Catarrh Can't be Cured
with Local Applications, as they cannot reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you have to take internal remedies.
