that lights have been seen and voices heard in his late call in the country, and he had hastened to the rescue.

"Oh, thank heaven you are a doctor!" cried Alice, clasping her hands in unconscious appeal.

"I believe in worse than ghosts," sighed Mrs. Gilman. "I believe that those lights and noises were made by tramps or burglars or hidden freighting this house while you were asleep."

"They won't come, mother; and if they did, I could protect you and myself. You know I have a revolver, and cousin Dick taught me how to shoot."

"A girl shoot, indeed!" scornfully returned Mrs. Gilman, resolute in her despair.

"I shall finish getting tea," said Alice, moving suddenly between her mother and the open door, however, instead of going out to her toilet.

"Here voice was sweet and cheery, and usual, and the friendly flush of the fire was still on her cheeks."

"To have made all this fuss about a picture and a looking-glass! Oh, what a fool I must seem."

"Not at all. You showed as much courage as the thing had been real, and your shot was well aimed enough to have brought down any living souldier."

"Here the doctor was interrupted by an sudden, started cry from Mrs. Gilman, who had been critically examining the broken mirror."

"It was not an immense fortune, but it was enough to give her beyond all need of the work and care and cheery economy of the past, and to make the future secure."

"Evidently Peter Gilman had hidden it in his deep robed distrust of banks, and had been unable to reveal the secret."

"So it is understood, after several other theories had been discussed and dismissed over the supper that Alice at length succeeded in preparing without interruptions, except from Harris Boyd's zeal but not very skillful efforts to help."

"All's well that ends well," said Alice to herself, as she laid her weary head on her pillow.

"Of course it was a wonderfully fortunate thing," she thought; "but I do wish it had happened differently for now that young doctor will most likely court Alice for her money, and all this has given him such a chance of making himself a hero to her."

"It was not for the money that Mr. Boyd courted winsome Alice, and his mother-in-law has long since repented her unjust suspicion."

"When Men See Snakes. The cause of persons whose nerves are excited by protracted and excessive use of stimulants seeing the shapes of animals in the clouds, or in the air, or in the water, is frequently congested and swollen to such size as to become visible, and when this happens the effect generally is to appear as if there were an object of considerable size at a distance from the eye."

"Of course, the veins are generally long, thin and sinuous, like a serpent, and the figure seen is frequently startlingly like a snake. That they seem to live is due to the fact that they are not in perfect line with the direct front of sight. They are either to the side, up or down from the focus; therefore, when discovered, the victim naturally turns his eyes toward the effect, and the effect, of course, moves away."

"The eye follows, and thus a continuous and realistic motion is got. Now, if the eye is returned to the front again quickly it sees another snake, which if watched will glide away in the same manner."

"The man who talks in his sleep is not so much of a nuisance as the man who sleeps in his talk."

"The good die young. The others about the oldest inhabitants and the others about the weather, their age, and the feeling when they were young."

"A good reputation is better than all the wealth of this world."

A Town Lot Free. I had heard about the town in Kansas who was giving away town lots free, and one day I left the train at a small station and hired a man to drive me over to the site of the future great city.

Republican Candidates. THE NEXT ANTI-GRAND GENERAL. General D. McM. Gregg, the hero of Gettysburg, the nominee for Auditor General, is one of the best known military men in Eastern Pennsylvania today.

In personal appearance General Gregg is dignified and steady. He is six feet in height, of slender build, and his eyes and mustache are just turning gray.

He was born in Huntingdon, Pa., April 30, 1833, from which Congressional district he was appointed to West Point July 1, 1851. He graduated from that institution July 1, 1853, and stood eighth in his class.

"I do." "I had heard so." "Go right out and select any one you like. Those selected are marked with red stakes; those not yet taken by black ones."

"I took a walk around and made a selection, and he found the number, and said: 'I do.' 'I had heard so.' 'Go right out and select any one you like. Those selected are marked with red stakes; those not yet taken by black ones.'"
