a fruit farm belonging to Mr. George S. Good, about a mile and a half from that place. Out of 8,000 peach trees planted, more than 5,000 are growing finely, and, with the exception of a few recently planted are all loaded with fruit. Seven men are 1889, on the battlefield of Gettysburg, it was kept busy every day in proping the trees resolved that the pext reunion of the Regi-Mr. Good's system of propping consists of a centre pole lashed to the trunk of the tree and the limbs in all directions tied up to this pole by means of tar rope. Some idea of the extent of this tying may be had by knowing that more than $50 worth of twine has been used for the purpose. An estimate of this peach crop is 8,000 bushels and this is rather an under estimate. The apple trees are equally well loaded and the same system of propping is used. Choice Wagners, Baidwins and other varieties of winter apples fairly cover the trees. But for the propa the trees would be all broken down with the weight of the fruit. The pear and plum trees are young just beginning to bear, yet they were loaded with
