HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

Several nights ago a prominent business man living on Thirty-first street was awakened from sleep and discovered that his wife was missing.

There was no one in the house to send for help. The husband, threw upon the front door and fortunately, or unfortunately, a well-dressed gentleman, who proved to be an equally well-known young business man, returning from a late card party, passed by.

Arrayed in his night-gown, the husband hurried down the steps and called hastily to young man.

"What is the matter?" asked the husband, glancing up at the figure in white, whose glance was sufficient to terrify a less suspicious man.

"The young man required by his own house, where he summoned Dr. Riley by telephone. Then he went to the stable for his team and drove out on Thirty-first street to see if he could be of further assistance.

Housekeeping Without a Wash-day.
It might be well if we were only able to have a convincing sense of the reality of the charms of the innumerable washing machines and clothes wringers.

Taming a Shrew.
A certain woman of fashion, conspicuous in the society of a city not a thousand miles from Washington, whose infirmity of temper has given rise to very interesting gossip occasionally, figures in a little story that is at present going the rounds.

A Fault to Be Outgrown.
Among my acquaintances are several young physicians. For a considerable time I have been puzzled over the fact that each one of them is, as to religion and religious topics, and agnostic.

It is better to keep one servant and put out the wash, than two and do it at home. It is better to put it out than to hire help for your one servant to do it. And it is a thousand times better than doing it yourself, for, combined with other duties, few things are so physically and nervously wearing as the washing and ironing of clothes.
